IS THERE ROOM? — Miss Bonnie Laveirge doesn't know if the clothes she wants to take along this weekend will fit in that bag, but the problem can't dampen her spirits. She's engaged to Harry (Bud) Justice, who is a junior at Western Washington State College. Bud's friends, tired of seeing him "mope around" missing Bonnie, collected $150 for a plane ticket so she could fly to Washington for the school's homecoming festivities.

Steel Union Official Seeking Presidency

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — I. W. Abel, secretary-treasurer of the United Steelworkers (USW), announced today he will oppose David J. McDonald in elections next February for the presidency of the nation's third largest union.

It will be the first open power struggle in the history of the giant union and could have significant effect on the steel industry's 1965 contract talks. The outcome of the talks could affect the pocketbook of nearly every American.

McDonald shrugged off Abel's candidacy.

Urban County Plan Proposed

DENVER (AP) — A draft of a proposed constitutional amendment to establish the legal framework for organization of an urban county was presented Friday to the governor's 100-member Local Affairs Study Commission.

The draft also included provisions for municipal home rule, home rule for non-urban counties and the elimination of the two-year term limit for councilmen in statutory cities and towns.

The amendment would establish Denver Urban County and would make the form of the government available to other areas upon meeting certain criteria.

Urban counties would be given the responsibility for performing certain functions in both the incorporated and unincorporated areas.

Soldier Held For Robbery

A Ft. Carson soldier, Charles R. Winger, 22, has been charged by police with the armed robbery of the Royal Liquor Store, 333 S. Tejon St.

The case, however, is still under investigation.

According to the information, a man entered the liquor store about 11 p.m. Thursday and inquired about prices of brands of beer. After an employe, William B. Calandrella, gave him the prices, the man said he would have to talk to his "buddy" who was in a car outside.

Calandrella told police that shortly afterwards, the first man and another one entered the store with pistols and forced him into a back room while they rifled one of two cash registers.

The police report did not list the amount of money taken.

Engineers Ask Carson Job Bids

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Army Engineers advertised Friday for bids on construction of a multi-million-dollar building complex for the Army at Ft. Carson, Colo.

Col. Harold J. St. Clair, Omaha district engineer, said the cost would be more than $10 million. Among the buildings will be 10 three-story barracks for enlisted men and a three-story headquarters building.

Other construction will include a chapel, gymnasium, post exchange, four mess halls, four headquarters and classroom buildings, and four administrative and storage buildings.

Each of the 26 buildings will be of brick-faced masonry.

Crooks Get Film Test

LONDON (AP)—Cameras kept turning at the Shepperton Film studios near London Friday when three masked bandits dashed through a crowded set on which Kim Novak was performing.

The real-life crooks, one carrying a shotgun, took a quick exit across Kim's set after being foiled in an attempt to seize a $42,000 payroll in the studios' nearby office.

An American broadcasting television unit was filming Kim in "The Amorous Adventures of Moll Flanders." Shepperton camera crews also were in action.

Both kept shooting as the crooks dashed past and escaped across fields near the studio. Later both lots of film were processed and shown to police.

Burch Tells GOP Stop Bickering Count Blessings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican Chairman Dean Burch urged party leaders Friday to quit bickering and count their blessings.

But even as he spoke, there was fresh criticism of the conservative leadership of Sen. Barry Goldwater, the party's presidential nominee who went down to a resounding defeat in Tuesday's election.

The skirmishing could presage a full-fledged drive by Republican liberals and moderates to recapture control of the party which went to Goldwater at the GOP presidential nominating convention.

Burch, in his plea for party unity, said he will call a Republican National Committee meeting after the first of the year to discuss "all questions of interest to the party, including that of my chairmanship."

"I seek to lead, not to dictate, and I will continue that leadership as long as the Republican party wants me to," he said.

At least one state GOP leader had different ideas. Wisconsin GOP Chairman Talbot Peterson suggested former Vice President Richard M. Nixon for the job. Peterson said Goldwater's candidacy had carried to defeat a number of Republican hopefuls, including Wilbur Renk, the GOP Senate nominee in Wisconsin.

Nixon said Thursday that he would not seek the job or encourage those who want him to take it.

Javits Asks Goldwater Quit as Leader

NEW YORK (UPI) — Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., said Friday the Republican party is in such bad shape that the leadership dispute that flared into the open between former Vice President Richard M. Nixon and Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller could not split it any further.

At the same time Javits urged Sen. Barry M. Goldwater to resign as titular head of the party.

"I ask Sen. Goldwater to step down, I do not demand it," Javits said. He explained he did not believe he could make such a demand because he did not support Goldwater in the presidential election.

"He's continuing his vendetta against Sen. Goldwater and he should knock it off," Nixon said.

U. S. Insists On Air Rights

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States reminded the Soviet Union once more Friday that it will hold the Soviets responsible for the safety of American planes flying the Berlin air corridors.

A Soviet official said in Berlin yesterday that the Russians would not be able to guarantee the safety of newly inaugurated British commercial flights between London and West Berlin. He said this was because the British had made no arrangements with Communist East Germany.

The State Department said the Soviet warning appeared to be routine. A similar notice was issued last summer when Pan American World Airways began direct flights between New York and Berlin. The Pan American flights have continued.

Aged Couple Die in Crash

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Stanley S. Outwater, 75, and his wife, Julia, 73, of Denver were killed Friday in a two-car collision on U.S. 85 just north of Brighton.

Their deaths raised Colorado's 1964 traffic fatality count to 472, up 49 from the same date in 1963.

The State Patrol said a car driven by Outwater was making a left turn from U.S. 85 on to Wattenburg Road when it was struck broadside by a southbound car on the highway driven by Ruby Lee Hunt, 53, of Hudson. She was treated for minor lacerations at Brighton Community Hospital.

Operations Give Brothers Sight, They See Pope

VATICAN CITY (UPI)—A dream came true Friday for five young Sicilian brothers who were born blind and regained their sight after an operation last month. They saw the Pope.

Pope Paul VI received the Rotolo brothers—Caldgero, Giuseppe, Gioacchino, Carmelo and Paolo, aged from 4 to 15—in private audience Friday afternoon along with their parents and the doctors and townspeople who had helped them.

The boys were all born with congenital cataracts. They saw properly for the first time 18 days ago, when the bandages were removed from their eyes after operations by Dr. Luigi Picardo.

After the bandages were stripped away, each boy had his own idea of what he wanted to see first—a flower, a picture book, the Milan cathedral. But they agreed on one thing, they all wanted to see the Pope.

Friday the Pope not only let the boys see him, but talked to them in the throne room of the apostolic palace and gave them a box of candy, postage stamps and medals.

Ten paces to the left of the gate is a mound of dirt with a headstone.

Two Young People Killed On Bradley Road Crossing

Deaths of two persons Friday in a train-car accident pushed the El Paso County traffic death toll to a record 46 for this year, compared with 25 deaths this time in 1963, the State Patrol reported.

The victims were Larry A. Woolsey, 18, of 101 Jasper Dr., Security, and Mrs. Karen E. Salzer, 20, of the same address.

They both died of multiple fractures and internal injuries. Their bodies were taken to Nolan Funeral Home.

It was reported that the victims were brother and sister and their father and the women's husband were in California and preparing to move here.

The 1953 car, driven by Woolsey, was westbound on Bradley Road at 4:47 p.m. when it was struck by the train southbound on the Rio Grande Western Railroad tracks.

Engineer of the train was Charles S. Carter, 59, of Denver. The car was struck on the right side by the train and demolished.

The State Patrol said the car drove into the path of the train.

The car was knocked 166 feet from the point of impact. It landed in an open field. Both victims were thrown from the vehicle.

Brotzman May Head State GOP

DENVER (AP) — The name of Rep. Donald Brotzman, R-Colo., defeated for re-election, cropped up Friday as a possible choice of a new Republican party chairman for Colorado.

Paul Wolf, the present party chief, hasn't quit nor indicated that he would. There were indications at a post-election meeting Friday that he may step aside since he has been identified as a conservative and a backer of Barry Goldwater, the defeated presidential candidate.

Brotzman, whose home is at Boulder, was described by some party members as a good choice to bring warring factions back together.

The speculation developed after the party's state leaders met at a private luncheon to try to patch up differences and gear plans for a comeback in 1966.

Asks Move To Keep Balance

SAIGON (UPI)—Maj. Gen. Nguyen Khanh advised the United States Friday to take the war to Communist North Viet Nam and Red China. But as he spoke political turmoil increased in Saigon and a new crisis threatened.

Khanh, the former military premier, now chief of the armed forces, spoke to newsmen at Vithanh, a provincial capital in the Mekong Delta 100 miles southwest of Saigon, while on an inspection trip.

He said he told U.S. Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara "six or seven months ago" while he was premier that the balance of power in Asia will swing in favor of Communist China unless the United States acts.

"China has the manpower while the U.S. has the firepower," he said he told them.

Khanh recalled that during strategy planning talks he told the two American cabinet members "now if you wait until the Red Chinese have their own A-

Brezhnev Hails Election of Pres. Johnson

MOSCOW (UPI)—New Communist party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev, in a double jolt to visiting Chinese Communist Premier Chou En-lai, Friday hailed the election of President Johnson and restated a tough policy toward Peking.

Chou sat slumped and unsmiling as Brezhnev made his first major policy speech since toppling Nikita S. Khrushchev on Oct. 14. Chou applauded at first but his enthusiasm tapered off noticeably as Brezhnev scorned the hard anti-West line Peking demands as the price for peace.

Only Friday, the Peking People's Daily, official organ of the Chinese Communist party, demanded the Kremlin end its policy of peaceful coexistence with the United States as the price of peace.

Ironically, Brezhnev spoke in the Kremlin's Palace of congresses where the Sino-Soviet split developed publicly three years ago. Chou stalked out in anger then when Khrushchev denounced Peking's policies and set off the public denunciations

Nikita Reported Still in Moscow

PARIS (AP) — A French Communist delegation reported Friday that Nikita S. Khrushchev personally presided over the meeting of the Communist party central committee at which he was voted out as first secretary.

The delegation, just back from a fact-finding mission to Moscow, said that after the vote, Khrushchev pledged to spend the rest of his life working for Communism and was kept on as a central committee member.

It also said Khrushchev is still in Moscow.

French party chief Waldeck Rochet made the delegation's report at a news conference. He also said the French delegation had been told that Khrushchev resigned for reasons of health.

"We neither approve nor disapprove, since the resignation came as the result of a decision by the central committee of the Soviet Communist party," Rochet declared.

U.S. Blasts at French

By STEWART HENSLEY

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States publicly blasted the French government of President Charles de Gaulle on Friday for its attacks on the American effort to create a NATO nuclear surface fleet.

At the same time, the State Department formally announced three more in a series of meetings with high officials of other Allied nations to consider the grave crisis within the alliance. The bitter French-American dispute dominates the situation.

The State Department flatly rejected charges by French Premier Georges Pompidou that his government had not been kept fully informed on plans for the NATO fleet project, known officially as the "multilateral nuclear force (MLF)."

It told France, in effect, to come up with better ideas of its own for nuclear strategy in the alliance instead of trying to sabotage Washington's proposals.

Commenting on Pompidou's assertion in a speech Thursday that the MFL began as "something vague, something confused," and that France had never been fully informed about the proposed fleet, State Department press officer Robert J. McCloskey said:

"As regards the MLF, it has been discussed many times at the NATO council and in NATO ministerial meetings ... The fullest information on the MFL has always been available to

"We just got tired of seeing him mope around the place," the friends explained, "and we decided to do something about it." Dunning other students, the friends collected $150 so that Bonnie could fly out for homecoming.

"I haven't seen him since Sept. 5," Bonnie said. She was fairly bubbling with excitement as she packed her bags Friday morning.

"He called Sunday night and told me. I couldn't even believe it. But he said the ticket was waiting for me in the Denver airport. He said they just wanted to do something for us for the wedding. This was the best thing I can imagine anyone doing. I leave here at 5 this afternoon and get there at 7:23."

"After we got the ticket, the only problem was for me to get the day off work Saturday. I work at Montgomery Ward's. My boss kind of kidded me around and scared me to death, but he said it was okay.

"I got my hair cut yesterday and bought a new outfit to wear to the ball game. Golly, I can't wait to see him. I still can't believe his friends did that."

Bud and Bonnie met about a year ago when his father, SSgt. Jim Snover, was transferred to Ent Air Force Base. The Snovers and the Laveirge's are next door neighbors.

Bonnie is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen W. Laveirge.

Valuable Coin Collection Reported Stolen

A large coin collection has been stolen from the home of Fred Walker, three miles east of Monument on Highway 50, a sheriff's report said Friday.

Walker said the collection was valued at several thousand dollars, but he would have to make an inventory to determine its exact worth.

He told deputies that he and his wife left home early Thursday morning, and when his wife returned in mid-afternoon, she found the front door open, and the house ransacked.

The couple's dog was discovered locked in the garage.

er, and Charles Marcus Edwards, 31, a paper mill employe, were charged with the murder last spring of Negroes Charles Moore and Henry Hezekiah Dee, both 19.

They vanished last spring and their decomposed torsos were found in the Mississippi River near Tallulah, La. in July by a search party looking for the three civil rights workers.

The civil rights workers were later found shot to death and buried beneath an earthen dam near Philadelphia, Miss. Their killers have not been apprehended.

Moore, a college student, and Dee, a local laborer, were not connected with civil rights activity, authorities said.

Seale and Edwards were arrested by local officers and FBI agents at their homes near here Friday morning and charged with the murders before Justice of the Peace Willie Bedford.

The two Negroes were killed "on or about May 2," authorities said.

that shook the Communist world.

Brezhnev told a cheering Kremlin audience of 6,000 Russian and visiting Communist leaders: "The American elections recently showed a majority of Americans cherish peace and are tired of the cold war. The defeat of American ultras is a good lesson for all supporters of adventurism."

Chou, making a personal pilgrimage to Moscow heralded as an attempt to open the door to an end of the Sino-Soviet cold war, heard Brezhnev make a plea for world Communist unity. Chou listened holding the earphone of a translating device to his head.

He stared at the ceiling when Brezhnev once more vowed Soviet allegiance to a policy of peaceful coexistence with the West. This policy is one of the main differences with Peking which believes a war with capitalism is inevitable—and perhaps desirable.

Brezhnev praised the Kremlin policies of de-Stalinization which Peking never has accepted—there were even unconfirmed reports Chou has visited Josef Stalin's grave. Brezhnev praised a plan to remove limits on farmers' private plots whereas Peking sternly controls agriculture.

Brezhnev praised the nuclear test ban pact which Peking has denounced as knuckling under to the West. He praised the program to give the Russians more material goods while Peking is trying to emphasize heavy industry. And he said war is not inevitable.

Brezhnev did not hurl any of the direct insults used by Khrushchev, but the path of policy was almost unchanged.

Chou and Brezhnev conferred in the Kremlin before the speech and the official Tass news ugency said they had a "friendly talk." It gave no details.

About 1,000 students assembled Friday afternoon to criticize the members of the new cabinet for not being young or militant enough.

The students did not threaten demonstrations but they appealed to chief of state Phan Khac Suu to replace Premier Tran Van Huong, the former Saigon mayor. The students said his government contained "non - revolutionary" holdovers from previous governments.

The students' ire was directed against a Huong statement that politics should be kept out of the classrooms and the pagodas. It was massive student and buddhist demonstrations which brought down the last two governments.

Santa Ana, Calif., Probes Birch Influence in Police

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — At least a dozen policemen, most identified as members of the John Birch Society, are under investigation in this capital of California conservatism, accused of harassing the chief of police.

Two were fired Friday.

City Manager Carl J. Thornton, who announced Thursday that the investigation has started, said information in hand "clearly indicates that the majority of the personnel implicated in this disruptive activity are members of the local chapter of the John Birch Society."

But Thornton said he believes "these individuals have used, or, rather, misused, the cloak of membership in the . . . society for purposes entirely opposite to the national policy of that organization."

Police Chief Edward J. Allen said he dismissed Capt. Fred Hopper and Lt. Loran Norton, both 36 and veterans of the force, because they "were involved in a power play and an attempt to circumvent my power."

Allen described Norton as "an advertised speaker for the John Birch Society." The chief said Norton neither confirmed nor denied it. Allen said Hopper is not a society member.

Allen, who became chief here in 1955, said he has no quarrel with the state principles of the Birch Society but is not a member.

Allen was chief liquor law enforcement officer for the state of Ohio before coming to Santa Ana. Before that, Thornton said, Allen "chased the gangs out of Youngstown, Ohio."

Norton and Hopper may request a hearing by a city personnel board after receiving formal statements of the charges against them.

Thornton said dissident officers have circulated anonymous pamphlets questioning the chief's honesty and morality. He said they also have ordered flowers in his name and had them sent to his office, placed classified for-sale advertisements in newspapers in his name and sent taxis and fire department apparatus to his home during the night.

Thornton said he purposely withheld the announcement of the investigation until after the election.

"I felt the mere mention of the John Birch Society in this situation could have been used or misused in the national campaign," Thornton said. "The city of Santa Ana could have become a nationwide problem and it certainly would have been damaging to my city."

Santa Ana, which had a population of 100,350 in 1960, is located about 30 miles southeast of Los Angeles and is the seat of Orange County. The county elected a Birch Society member, John G. Schmitz of Santa Ana, to the State Senate Tuesday.

The Independent, a newspaper in nearby Long Beach, quoted an unnamed spokesman of the group under investigation as saying that the police chief was "dictatorial, abusive and unreasonable with his men," and, "those of us in the group can't take any more of his treatment and we have banded together in mutual defense."

John Rousselot, national public relations director of the Birch Society, said in a statement Friday:

"It is my opinion that the John Birch Society is merely being used . . . as a scapegoat for some internal problem in the Santa Ana Police Department. I have no independent knowledge of what this problem may be.

"We don't have any program to harass the chief of Santa Ana, or any police department anywhere."

the 44-year-old air force general said in an interview.

The U.S.-trained Barrientos headed the fiercely fought revolt that overthrew strongman President Victor Paz Estenssoro Wednesday, and he now appears to be in firm control of the nation.

This barren, tin-mining country, perched high in the Andes, depends heavily on U.S. economic aid. The United States has poured in more than $300 million in the last 12 years.

American recognition of Barrientos' regime has not come yet. It has been reported that the Johnson administration, which supported Paz Estenssoro, is pondering the upheaval with some misgivings.

"We hope to obtain recognition soon," Barrientos said.

Venezuela broke diplomatic relations with Bolivia Friday because it is that country's policy to not recognize a junta that seizes power from a legally elected government.

Barrientos said his 16-man military junta "will hold free and democratic elections as soon as possible, perhaps in six months, no later than in one year."

Barrientos, a soft-spoken, articulate man, said the revolt that overthrew Paz "had been simmering for a long time, because Dr. Paz's regime was engaged in a senseless fight to divide our people, to repress and murder opponents."

U. S. May Cut UN Contributions

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — The United States indicated Friday it may cut back voluntary contributions to the United Nations as long as the Soviet Union balks at paying.

U.S. sources said that the United States would not make its customary annual pledges to the U.N. Special Fund and the expanded program of U.N. Technical Assistance at a pledging conference Nov. 16.

Diplomats generally interpreted the U.S. move as linked to the American attempt to force the Soviet Union to meet its dues for peace keeping in the Congo and the Middle East. Because the Soviet Union is more than two years in arrears, the United States has vowed to try to strip it of its vote under a provision of the U.N. Charter when the General Assembly convenes Dec. 1.

the "principal divider" of the party during the presidential election.

Rockefeller, through his New York office, replied that Nixon was acting "peevish" and added that such statements were becoming "typical" of the former vice president.

Javits sided with Rockefeller.

"I feel that these characterizations he (Nixon) made are not healthly," avits said. "But the party is in such bad shape now that it cannot be divided further."

Nixon had suggested that Republicans who "sat on the sidelines" during the campaign could not now step forward as leaders in any party reorganization. Both Javits and Sen. Kenneth B. Keating, R-N.Y., who lost his bid for re-election to Robert F. Kennedy, refused to support Goldwater.

"I don't believe we can be ruled out of the future of the Republican party, and I will not be," Javits replied.

Two Propose Plan For Bottle Clubs

DENVER (AP) — Secretary of State Byron Anderson and Safety Manager Daniel Hoffman of Denver agreed Friday to propose legislation to outlaw the operation of bottle clubs.

The two officials said they preferred legislation that would permit them to regulate bottle clubs. However, Hoffman said they agreed that "the headaches of regulating them are almost insurmountable."

Bottle clubs are membership clubs that allow qualified members to bring their bottles of liquor to the establishment for after-hours consumption.

"radical views" of the GOP ticket.

Goldwater said earlier this week he intends to retain leadership. And Burch has given no hint that he will quit willingly.

In his statement, Burch said: "I think we should count our blessings. We have a solid financial foundation. We have an army of volunteers eager to do battle. We have active party organizations in every one of the 50 states. It now remains for us to demonstrate that we can unite and win in 1966."

Arthur D. Larson, onetime assistant to the latest Republican president, Dwight D. Eisenhower, said Goldwater is "the guy who really crushed the Republican party."

He added in a Logan, Utah interview: "The conservatives are telling us we aren't true Republicans. I was with Eisenhower in the middle of the greatest landslide the party ever had and now the element that took us to its greatest defeat is pelting us with this."

But in San Marino, Calif., the public relations director of the militantly conservative John Birch Society, former Rep. John Roussellot, said "Sen. Goldwater has been willing to fight for a strong, conservative position and is to be congratulated for articulating it so well."

The battle for conservatism is a long-haul proposition, Roussellot said, "as the forces of collectivism have been working to undermine our free society for better than 70 years."

U. S. Blasts At French

all members of NATO including the French government."

The official spokesman said the United States was "aware of the French view expressed from time to time that the organization of NATO needs revision," he added, however, we are not aware of any French proposals to this effect but we are quite certain they would be given careful attention by all members of the alliance."

Secretary of State Dean Rusk and other top officials were known to have been sharply irritated by Pompidou's speech. The French premier implied that the proposed MFL would damage European unity, provoke Russia, and was directed "more or less against France" in the political sense.

It was believed that Rusk himself had personally dictated the department statement, which was the most sternly worded official pronouncement yet by the American government on this subject.

The bitter exhcnage between the two old allies has sharpened the crisis within the alliance and tightened the squeeze on West Germany, which is trying to get along with both Washington and Paris.

The department disclosed Friday that West German Foreign Minister Gerhard Schroeder has been invited here by Rusk for a discussion of NATO problems and other matters of "mutual interest."

The German minister is under sharp attack at home by some pro De Gaulle elements of his own Christian Democrat party because of his determination to stick with Washington at all costs. He will confer here Nov. 23 and 24 with Rusk, Undersecretary of State George Ball and other officials.

The Public eruption of the Franco-American dispute over nuclear strategy came after an intensification of De Gaulle's diplomatic offensive against the nuclear fleet idea. French Ambassador Herve Alphand has told Rusk the idea is "divisive" and threatens to split NATO. Lesser French officials have dropped hints in Allied capitals that De Gaulle might actually pull out of NATO if the MLF goes into operation.

Pompidou has denied this in public. But there are indications the French leader might at least withdraw from NATO control the French ground and air forces—two divisions and 27 squadrons respectively — which still remain under orders of NATO.

So far, only West Germany is strongly in favor of the MFL, which would consist of 25 surface vessels, each armed with eight Polaris missiles. The flotilla vessels would be manned by mixed crews drawn from participating nations.

The whole thing would be under NATO command but the United States, as required by law, would retain veto power over the actual firing of the missiles.

NOT QUITE LIKE HOME — Mrs. Iantha Baker, Air Force Academy Family Services coordinator, and Mrs. Holly Bernier, her counterpart at Ent AFB, sample the wares of the cadet mess hall, Mitchell Hall, with Capt. Family Services members from both installations toured the mess hall and found that although the cooking may be just like home, operating such a huge facility differs just a bit from running their own kitchens. 14-Year Period of Quiet Ended by Hurricanes

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In 1964, here they came. Cleo, Dora and Isbell all flounced into Florida, bringing to an end a 14-year period of tranquility in which only one of the twisting ladies of the tropics came calling.

Another, Hilda, snaked into Louisiana.

Was this the beginning of a new cycle, a decade or more when Florida could expect to be slugged with regularity?

Could be, says Chief Storm Forecaster Gordon Dunn of the Miami Weather Bureau.

Dunn doesn't put too much stock in cycles. Past records indicate cycles of a sort, but they have been overlapping and poorly defined.

"But, since 1955, hurricane tracks have tended to return to normal," Dunn said. "For the next 10 to 15 years, the frequency of hurricanes in Florida and on the Gulf Coast should increase somewhat.

"This doesn't mean that Florida will continue to have three each year, or even in a majority of years. There have been three-hurricane seasons only 10 times in 80 years.

"On the average, Florida has a major hurricane only once every four years.

"Donna (1950) was the last one hitting Florida to qualify as a major hurricane, which means sustained winds of 135 miles an hour and central pressure of 28.2 inches or lower.

"We did not rate any of the three hurricanes of 1964 as major, although Cleo and Dora didn't miss it by much."

One predominant factor in determining the tracks of the 1964 hurricanes was the Bermuda high in the Atlantic. It was strong this year and lay near the coast. Hurricanes are repulsed by high pressure and Cleo, Dora, Isbell and Hilda, unable to turn northward, bareled into the coast.

Dora followed a track no other hurricane has taken in recorded history. She roared straight off the Atlantic into northeast Florida, an area never before hit head-on by a storm of hurricane force.

One cheerful note for Florida in this windy year was that its storm-proof building code stood the test of the tropical cyclone. Three hurricanes brought only a single death in the state—a drowning. Two drowned off the Florida Keys when high seas swamped a shrimp boat.

Thirty-seven died during the year in Louisiana, three in Virginia and one in Georgia.

On the islands of the Caribbean, 153 are known to have been killed by raging wind and tide. Probably, many other deaths were unreported, particularly in the news-censored dictatorships of Cuba and Haiti.

Two quick-forming tropical storms formed in June and July but were given no names. One crossed north Florida and the other swiped Bermuda, causing negligible damage.

Abby, also springing up suddenly just off the Texas Coast Aug. 7, was a lady. Crossing the coast with winds topping at 65 miles an hour in gusts, she brought beneficial rain to cotton and rice crops.

Just one day later came Brenda. She hit Bermuda but the only damage to several parked airplanes, was believed to have been caused by a small tornado in the storm system.

The hurricane season actually began Aug. 15, when an orbiting Tiros satellite spotted the birth of a monster in the hot, steamy region off the coast of Africa near Dakar.

This was Cleo, a storm that was to rage across a vast expanse of tropic seas, killing and destroying.

Cleo's first landfall was the French island of Guadeloupe at the eastern edge of the Caribbean. There, with winds slamming at 140 miles an hour around her center, she killed 14 persons, injured 40, wiped out the banana crop, and destroyed 1,000 homes the afternoon of Aug. 22

Cleo roared on through the Caribbean south of the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico. It made a northward shift into the Barahona Peninsula of Haiti and left 132 known dead and heavy destruction there.

Seven more died in the Dominican Republic, which took a glancing blow from the storm.

Cleo had lost strength and probably was not a hurricane when she crossed Cuba, leaving one dead, but she built up strength in the Florida Straits and was gusting at 135 when she became the first hurricane to give Miami a direct hit since Oct. 17, 1950.

In roaring the length of the Florida's east coast, Cleo did an estimated $112 million damage to property and $9 million to crops. Greatest losses were in a strip 20 to 35 miles wide from Miami to Melbourne.

Cleo's Florida toll would have been far less except that some merchants and hotel owners left glass building fronts unshuttered. This, plus damage to overhead power and telephone lines and the cost of cleaning up fallen trees, accounted for most of the cost at Miami.

Dora, a huge hurricane, pushed a 12-foot tide across Florida's Anastasia Island—the highest ever known there—and slammed into St. Augustine Sept. 11 with winds of 125 miles an hour. Jacksonville recorded the first hurricane winds in its history.

Storm tides inundated communities in northeast Florida, washed out roads and swept beach homes into the sea. Rains exceeding 10 inches pelted an area of 10,000 square miles in Florida and Georgia. Mayo, Fla., recorded 24 inches in three days.

Leaving an estimated $200 million damage in Florida, Dora swept into Georgia to take another $10 million toll, then swept northward off the coast, giving birth to tornadoes and waterspouts that caused damage in North Carolina, Delaware and Virginia.

Ethel, Florence and Gladys all remained at sea but Hilda, springing up in the Caribbean Sept. 28, renewed the assault on land areas.

Crossing the western tip of Cuba, Hilda roared up the gulf to hit Louisiana and force an exodus of 150,000 from coastal areas. Thirty seven persons were killed in Louisiana, 21 in tornadoes and crop losses amounted to $100 million.

Isbell was last in the parade of tropic terrors. She wiped out Cuba's valuable tobacco crop, sank a shrimp boat with two aboard in the Florida Straits, did $175,000 damage to the Florida Keys, then raced across south Florida from Everglades City to Jupiter.

Eleven tornadoes born in Isbell's circulation struck at Florida, injured 50 persons, none seriously. Property damage in Palm Beach county amounted to $700,000.

Governor Not Candidate for Top GOP Post

DENVER (UPI)— Gov. John Love ruled himself out today as a possible candidate for chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Oklahoma Gov. Henry Bellmon suggested Love and several other Republican governors for the post. GOP National Chairman Dean burch, handpicked by Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., was caught in a swirl of controversy after Goldwater's crushing defeat by President Johnson.

Many top Republicans, including Bellmon, have called for Burch's ouster.

"As far as I'm concerned, I don't see how the national chairman's job would be compatible with the job of being governor of the State of Colorado, which is a full-time job—and deservedly so," Love said in a telephone interview with UPI.

SNOW WARNING

If snow remains on your neighbor's roof after it has melted from yours, it's a good bet he's paying less for fuel than you are, says insulation experts at Allied Chemical's Barrett Division. A snow-free roof often indicates inadequate insulation and unnecessary loss of heat.

Young Couples Are Good Market For New Homes

One out of five new-home buyers are newly married couples. And the number of married couples will increase annually from now on, economists predict.

This, according to Robert Jacobsen, a home improvement specialist for the Flexalum division of Bridgeport Brass Company, should give builders some incentive to design homes to meet the needs of this younger market.

These, he says include:

1. Plenty of room for growth. Homes with initial lower costs that can be finished as the family grows, make a lot of sense here.

2. Plenty of outdoor living area. Many families with infants the Flexalum specialist says, spend plenty of time in their own backyards in the shade of their aluminum patio cover where they can entertain family and friends and keep an eye on the youngsters.

3. Plenty of color. Young people go more for bright colors both inside and outside the house. They are also interested in new materials that will not fade or require frequent repainting or replacement.

The trend to home buying among young couples, Jacobsen adds, is indicative of the higher economic level that prevails today and the desire of families in all age groups for a "place of our own."

Here's the Answer

QUESTION: The roof on our house is flat, with a slight slant to it. Lately, there has been a tiny leak through one side of the skylight during the heavy rainstorms.

It seems to be coming through at a point where the skylight meets the roof, but I have made several examinations without fining even the smallest opening. Is there some way I can fix the leak, even though I do not know exactly where the water is coming throught?

ANSWER: Not knowing where the leak is, your best bet is to fix all possible suspected areas. First, be sure the glass is tight in the frame. Water could be leaking under loose putty.

There is metal flashing where the skylight is joined to the roof. See that the flashing is tightly in place. Look for exposed nailheads or nailholes, since water could leak along or through them. If there are such nailheads or holes, or any tiny cracks around the flashing, cover them with roofing cement. Spread out the cement so there are no valleys which might trap rain water.

Your last checkpoint is the skylight frame, especially if it is made of wood. Look for splits or signs of rot. Fill all openings with wood putty or plastic wood and give the entire frame a coat of exterior paint.

(Questions of general interest will be answered in this column. Individual correspondence can not be undertaken.)

KEEPING FIT

A home gym may be what your family really needs to keep fit, especially in the winter. Basements, attics and spare rooms are good locations. Or try a remodeled garage, particularly if it can be tied into a small enclosed patio for summer sunbathing or outdoor exercise on good off-season days. Use durable, easily-maintained materials for the most enjoyment, such as ceramic floor and wall tile that will never need painting, waxing or replacement.

If you own property, made a down payment on a building lot or contemplate doing so, this tool or bunkhouse should prove of interest. As a new member to the ever-growning legion of landowners, you'll want to spend as much time as possible "working your land". Regardless of whether it is fifty feet or fifty acres, the thrill of ownership and the desire to make something out of it is what makes landowners something special the world over.

Right from the start you will need tools for weekend use, a shovel, axe, saw and many other pieces of equipment. The house illustrated provides the ideal answer to tool storage and it's easy and economical to build. The pattern offered below contains complete instructions for building a 4 foot x 8 ft., 8 ft. x 8 ft., or 8 ft. x 12 ft. or any additional length desired. Overnight bunking is quite comfortable in the 8 ft. x 16 ft. size.

Construction has been so simplified only hand tools are needed. The pattern method tells what to buy and where each piece of material is used. It even specifies the pounds of nails required, and where each size is used. Full size patterns simplify making angle cuts on rafters and studs.

If you build the toolhouse before your home is constructed, locate it in a corner of your property so it will be handy after your house is built.

Send $1.00 in check or money order for Tool or Bunkhouse Pattern No. 51 to (Gazette Telegraph), P.O. Box 215, Briarcliff Manor, New York 10510. Send additional 50 cents for catalog illustration 300 other build it yourself pattern projects and home improvement books.

Built-in Can Create Special Entrance Hall

If your home isn't ready-built with an entrance hall, there are things you can do to create one.

The finest idea is to add a divider that makes a graceful separation of space while contributing to the workability of the house.

One such practical addition would be a desk unit that also contains file drawers and cupboards for the family's volume of paper storage. Such a unit makes top use of rather limited space — and can give you that needed home office at the same time.

The desk would attach to the living room wall near the front door and extend as far out as needed. Five to six feet is desirable. A height of 30 inches will provide writing comfort, and depth can range from 15 to 24 inches.

If the kneehole is set close to the wall, a lamp can be placed for the main writing area without the decorating problem of a cord snaking across the desk top.

Then, extending toward the opposite end of the desk unit can be the various drawers and storage cabinets.

The unit can be coordinated with the rest of the room by two means. First, it can be made to increase the room's seating capacity by adding another built-in facing into the living room: a banquette that uses the desk as its back. Shaped bolsters will provide the needed slant for the backrest.

The seat can be a simple platform built on a base recessed to provide tuck-in space for feet. Foam cushions cut to fit the seat platform are inexpensive and can have zippered covers for easy upkeep. A small point: use a slightly raised edge around the lip of the platform so that cushions don't scoot off.

The entire unit can be built of any handsome, easily worked western wood like ponderosa pine or west coast hemlock and matched to solid board paneling for the second decorative coordinate. Paneling of either of these prestige woods is a welcome accent in any room and can do much to meld the living room with the new entrance hall.

The paneling should extend the length of the one living room wall, then wrap around into the entrance area. Match paneling finish to the desk and banquette unit.

Family Activities Change, Set Home Decor Mood

The way we live greatly influence the type of home or apartment selected as our "private" world. As our way of life changes, our taste also changes. In small quarters, rooms often serve more than one purpose. Therefore, it is natural that walls, furniture and furnishings should reflect the variety of functions desired by the occupants.

Today's architecture is leading us further and further away from four-square rooms. We find living areas devoted to certain activities which are not completely separated by full partitions with doors. As a result, we have a totally different kind of wall area to cover.

These include wall spaces occupied by windows, book cases or fireplaces; small areas reserved for paintings or as a background for sculpture; narrow spaces between window or doors; a stair landing wall; and sliding doors or louvered panels.

Most of us inherit some furniture ... the favorites becoming life-long cherished possessions; the misfits we discard. Our wall coverings we change fairly frequently. We may decide to give the room a new atmosphere or feeling, a new color scheme. Or, we may replace a piece or two of furniture. In our wall treatment, we can express our own changing and maturing taste.

Some people still think of wallpaper as quaint or old-fashioned — because it was so commonly used in the 18th and 19th centuries. Actually use of paper as a wall covering was just the beginning of the development of paper products as inexpensive substitutes for more costly materials. Early flock papers, for example, were a substitute for brocade and damask.

Thirty years ago, wallpapers were quite perishable. Modern processes have made them durable to a remarkable degree. "Contemporary" wall coverings can be waterproof, greaseproof, fade-proof, repel insects, absorb sound, insulate, etc. — all without sacrifice of beauty, appearance or color.

As wallpapers are designed to be used on the walls of a room, they can never be judged properly out of context. The fact that a small sample of a wallpaper is appealing does not prove that it will be so when it covers the walls of a particular room.

Design in wallpaper should be selected with thought as to what effect scale and composition of its elements will have on proportions of a particular room. Horizontal stripes make a room seem lower, narrower; vertical stripes make a room seem higher, shorter and narrower. Any trellis, fret or diagonal type of pattern will make the walls open out. Pictorial patterns create another illusion.

In a traditional dining room, used but a few hours each day, a decorative paper is fine. In a hallway used only for passage, the long, often irregular walls can be improved and cheered by gay and compelling patterns.

Regardless of which wall covering is selected, the appropriateness of its subject matter to the room is most important. Choice of wallpaper is usually a very personal matter. Today, however, anyone, can find a wide selection of beautiful, well-designed, properly-scaled wallpapers, many washable, at a price within reach of even the most modest decorating budget.

Hydronic Bases Do Better, Cost Less

It won't be long now and you'll remember what it was you intended to take care of this summer. The temperature will take a nosedive and, just like last year, your heating won't work right.

Painful reminder? But at least you remember. Now — what do you do about it? For one thing, you can save some money (maybe) by doing nothing at all and suffer all winter like you did last year. Or, how's this? Get it fixed right now and experience unusual, comfortable warmth in the cold months just ahead.

For homeowners who think they would like to give this second suggestion a whirl, the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau offers this timely tip — consider hydronic baseboards.

In hydronically (hot water) heated homes, this is now the most widely used method of room heat distribution. The popularity can be traced to two primary benefits: comfort and economy.

By maintaining uniform temperatures from wall to wall and floor to ceiling, baseboard heating eliminates hot spots, cold spots, chilly corners and drafty floors. Each person in a room enjoys the same measure of warmth, regardless of his position in the room. Children can play in complete comfort on pleasantly warm, healthy floors.

The even heat distribution provided by hydronic baseboard heating makes it unnecessary to overheat — thus saving fuel usually used to warm the "perennial cold spots" in the house.

Installation of baseboard heating by an experienced heating contractor is a simple, trouble-free matter today because of improved design and the use of pre-cut units that save you money.

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. Only when man is free to control himself and all he produces, can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government. Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is self-control, no more, no less. It must be consistent with the truths expressed in such great moral guides as the Golden Rule and the Declaration of Independence.

Politics or Principles

The November third elections, which wrecked the presidential, and probably the political hopes of Barry Goldwater, contain some fascinating lessons if one has the inclination to learn.

Foremost, from our point of view, is the fact that moral principles and politics are strangers and simply cannot be reconciled.

Let us state it. Barry Goldwater was and is a man of high principles. He wavered in places under popular pressure, but in the main he addressed himself to bed-rock concepts containing moral truths.

The result is more than adequately apparent. People, en masse, do not look to government to provide them with principles. They look to government to provide them with goodies. Mr. Goldwater's comments were like a dash of cold water to those accustomed to getting something from the federal till. His answer to our political dilemma was to cut giveaways, tighten our belts, tell the truth and work hard. This was not what the electorate wanted to hear.

But there is a deeper approach to this same observation. Even those who agreed with Mr. Goldwater's moral position were frequently out of harmony with the idea of forcing these same moral concepts on people generally, by means of federal action. And they were correct. Even if we assume that Mr. Goldwater was 100 per cent correct and his opponents 100 per cent in error, to force those in error to correct themselves, because sufficient power resided in someone to make them comply, is a wrong in itself.

In short, to improve the moral fiber of this country we will have to rely on institutions other than political. It cannot be done in the political arena.

Now, examine Mr. Johnson. He stated everything the people wanted to hear. It wasn't that they believed him, necessarily. He was familiar, offering the same old molasses and syrup just where it sounded the best. Moral issues seemed not to trouble him in the least. The government was there; why not use it? In his hands, he said, the government would be used to benefit everyone.

The absurdity, the pure corn of this oft-repeated phrase, was accepted by millions, often even by those who saw through the sham and the pretense and the general immorality.

But we had noted this same tendency in politics years ago. In fact, we have often seen it. When a man emerges somewhere who understands something of the problems and who claims that he can move into the government and "clean it up," he can kindle a moral response among those who are deeply moved by the moral sentiment. But, except for an occasional fluke, he is out of his element and is apt to be quickly tossed aside by a more expeditious opponent.

Nor is it necessary to have such an experience as a national election to reveal this conclusion. In pre-election skirmishes, we have often seen a man of moral principle emerge and vie for support among his party followers. The introduction of a man of principle in any political party is a sad thing. It throws the pros out of step. It confuses them. And it often loses the election for them.

Principles and politics don't mix. And therein lies the whole tragedy of the Republican effort at resurgence. For the Republicans have, for the last several decades, tried to mix principles with the compulsion of massed numbers. And, except for Eisenhower, who was enormously popular and not too burdened by moral perceptions, they failed absolutely. The Democrats, meanwhile, like to think of themselves as "practical" men. Politics, as they see it, is the science of the possible. There is no point in bothering with the niceties of "Should it be done?" or "Is it immoral?" Rather, the sole question has to do with the possible and the expedient; the power to be grasped, the popularity to be won; the impression that can be created.

We do not mean by any of the foregoing to suggest that all Democrats are as expedient as we have suggested their party to be; nor do we mean to imply that all Republicans are as steeped in moral concern as their party has, at least in some segments, attempted to be.

The fact is that for the first time in American politics two men emerged as contestants who became symbols for these divergent things. To his followers, Goldwater was a Saint George, a moral man fighting the dragon. To his followers, Johnson was a kindly, warm, practical sort of fellow who knew how to do favors for them.

The fact that neither man is precisely as his image proclaims carries no weight. People vote on their beliefs, never in relation to reality.

So, a lesson can be learned, if we will. Moral principles and politics don't go together. If you are concerned with politics, get into the fray, scrap it out, compromise, deal, spend, connive and pretend. If you are concerned with moral issues, find a superior arena.

Fundamental

The real business of America is business. Politics is the business of those who do not grasp the fundamentals of business.

Welcome to Neusteters

Neusteters department store has come to Colorado Springs and our growing city is enriched by the existence of this modern retail outlet. Neusteters has set a high standard and it is already reflected in the increased opportunity for convenience and luxury available in our sparkling central district.

The Neusteter operation is nationally famous. The Colorado Springs branch of the operation will doubtless enhance the firm's reputation.

There are three floors of alluring fashions, ranging from the little people's apparel to that available for all other ages. There's a tastefully appointed men's shop on the first floor, and a world of fashions for the ladies dominating the magnificently designed interior.

Of dramatic interest to all is the penthouse restaurant, complete with continental cuisine together with a magnificent panoramic view of our city and the front range of mountains. It sits on top of the three-story emporium to provide a royal setting for a lunch that will make a difference.

We wish to extend our most sincere congratulations to Myron D. Neusteter, president of Neusteters, who has been managing many of the details of getting into operation here. Neusteter stores already exist in Denver and Boulder and we trust that the Colorado Springs operation will be equally as rewarding.

Of particular interest to us was the fact that this new outlet has hired a good many local people to man its displays and activities, and included in this hiring has been a fine sprinkling of native talent as heads of various departments. Many times, a new operation such as Neusteters will bring into a community outsiders who will take all the executive posts, reserving lesser positions to the local citizens. Not so in this case. Among the executive personnel from Colorado Springs hired by the new store are Oscar Dull, personnel manager, and Mrs. Gladys Fester, who will serve as assistant to Benjamin Lovell, who is store manager.

Mrs. Adele H. White, also of this city, is manager of the fabulous penthouse. Others in charge of various departments are local to Colorado.

The appearance of Neusteters, on Cascade Avenue, has already given a new tone to Cascade which will be heightened as the Antlers Hotel comes down to be replaced by the huge Antlers Plaza, of which Neusteters will be a near-by adjunct. Cascade, at one time envisoned as the leading shopping street of Colorado Springs, had fallen into some measure of disuse in prior years. Now, that particular end of the downtown district is brightening, and in a very few more months we'll hardly know our fair city.

We are among those who rejoice when free enterprise is employed to better our lot. It is a much more healthy situation when new and highly competitive business and industry is introduced into the area than to seek to regulate existing business and industry by means of laws and rising taxation. In a competing market, existing economic factors provide for the finest kind of business discipline and in the meanwhile, our residents benefit by new and competitive prices.

So we extend the hand of welcome to this new store. May it grow and prosper.

These Days

The Tariff Syndrome

By JOHN CHAMBERLAIN

Harold Wilson, the head of Britain's new Labor government, has begun his regime by putting a fifteen per cent surcharge, or tax, on imports, which is a trick out of the book of the nineteen thirties when all the nations were doing their best to defend their home economies by "beggar my neighbor" devices.

The excuse offered by Mr. Wilson is a good one from the short-term point of view. The British have been importing too much and exporting too little, which means they have had to worry about a balance of payments situation that might have ended with a disastrous gold drain and an erosion of the value of the pound. Something had to be done about it, and if the Conservative party had remained in power it probably would have had recourse to the same sort of defensive tactics.

Even so, what has happened in England is a warning to the rest of the world that the economic health that goes with clearing the channels of international trade cannot be restored as long as we have the doctrine of socialism to contend with. For it was the threat of a labor party victory that helped aggravate the British import-export crisis in the first place. Knowing that the British Socialists would take restrictive measures to solve the balance of payments problem, British businessmen started a few months ago to stock up on imports. They thus compounded the problem, bringing on the equivalent of the sort of crisis that comes when factories become overstocked on inventory. Too much money going out, not enough coming in.

INCENTIVES

The reassuring word from London to Washington is that the British tax on imports is "temporary." The Labor government proposes to give tax incentives to home manufacturers in hopes that they will modernize their plants to the point where they can undersell their competitors in world markets and so bring the import-export situation into a natural balance. The trouble with this idea, however, is that no government with commitments to Socialist ideology is in a good position to help an economy renovate itself. Why should a British steel manufacturing company invest in new and efficient melting or rolling equipment when it is under the threat of being nationalized? And why should any business concern be moved to enthusiasm when an orthodox leftist from the Transport and General Workers Union, Frank Cousins, who has no love for automation, is put in charge of a Ministry of Technology? Or when a novelist, C. P. Snow, is made Cousins' assistant? True enough, Snow, a physicist, knows something about science in the abstract, but the adaptation of science to business is something that demands a special type of approach, one that blends engineering, market research and cost accounting in a way that government bureaucrats never seem to understand.

Cousins has been quoted as saying that it will be difficult to "bring science into industry. Because this is such a brand new thing." Such a statement reflects an almost abysmal ignorance of history. The whole history of the industrial revolution, from the invention of the steam engine on down, has been a matter of bringing science into industry.

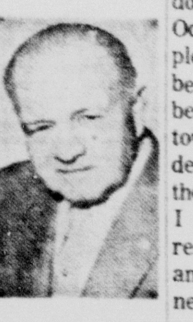
What is most depressing about the "temporary" British import tax is that it seems to confirm a growing world trend toward economic nationalism. In France, De Gaulle is threatening to pull his country out of the European Common Market if he can't get satisfaction on general European agriculture policy. In the United States, there is a tax on the export of capital. The so-called "Kennedy Round" on reciprocal tariff cutting, called for under the general agreement on tariffs and trade, has not been coming along as expected.

Knowing the difficulties under which the British are laboring, the rest of the world may be disposed to forebearance. "Our partners will understand," said George Brown, who is second to Harold Wilson in the Labor party hierarchy. But the Irish, so it appears from a statement by J. J. Stacey, the director-general of the Federation of Irish Industry, don't feel very happy about "understanding." Says Mr. Stacey, "This is a disaster for Irish industry. Many of our exports could not get into Britain against this surcharge."

On the Bright Side

By GEORGE BOARDMAN

I am indebted to a good friend and reader of the Santa Ana (Calif.) Register for a copy of a spritely, interesting magazine which has a new approach. The name of the publication is Millionaire, and it suggests, "You don't have to be a millionaire — just think like one." And this provides a lot of food for thought. Published in Long Beach, California, by Edward H. Kelly, who is also the editor, issue number four of volume one is 94 pages of interesting editorial and pictorial subject matter. It is interesting to note that the Millionaire utilizes its own publication to advertise highly specialized products, travel and vacation ideas. This indicates a strong faith in the selling power of the publication. There are probably a dozen pages devoted to excellent photographs of attractive young ladies which provide the reader with the happy feeling that the photographers and editorial staff like girls.



Several astute writers and lecturers, who are addicted to the market place, private enterprise philosophy, insist that the best way to defeat socialism and other forms of totalitarianism, is to become a millionaire. I can find no political bias in this issue of the excellent magazine, but certainly the emphasis is all on individualism, success stories of individuals and a generally affirmative point of view.

The spritely tone of the magazine stimulated my thinking. I took a closer look at the wealthy people I have known, and at others whose income permitted them to live like millionaires. Too many of the wealthy people have been apologists for their weath and this attitude, combined with the idea that everybody was out to separate the wealthy person from his money, created a general atmosphere which seemed less than happy. I suppose if a man worked hard to accumulate wealth it's natural for him to feel that others want to take it away from him, and this results in a general air of dullness and fearfulness which greatly diminishes the value of the accumulated wealth.

On the other hand, there are those whose earnings just about equal the returns which might be expected from one million dollars invested conservatively. Oddly enough, most of the people I have known who might be placed in this category have been or are similarly inclined towards apologism. They evidently do not really believe they earned their high salaries. I am sure that these attitudes result in a lot of mental unrest and a ridiculous lack of happiness. It is nice to think that a magazine like the Millionaire may provide inspiration which may create a greater happiness for those who are in a financial position which enables them to do things and go places.

The continuing bombardment of individualism by the socialist conglomerate has had a devastating effect upon the moral fiber of the people of this country. Millions of ordinarily intelligent Americans wander around feeling guilty about actions they are not even familiar with and uncommitted sins either of omission or commission. If they enjoy a fleeting moment of happiness, they feel guilty about it.

Once or twice before, I have mentioned a rather slow-moving trend which appears to be making some headway in widely separated areas of the country. Lake Havasu City, on the Colorado River and Lake Havasu about fifty miles south of Kingman, Arizona, is a rapidly building private enterprise community. The builders of the community emphasize strongly the possibilities for sun and fun, boating, fishing, water skiing and other outdoor recreational activities.

The elevation above sea level at Lake Havasu City is probably about 200 feet. Almost 1,000 miles away at an elevation of about 8,000 feet the remarkable private enterprise community of Vail, Colorado, is taking shape. When we took a look at Vail a few weeks ago, we were astonished at the tremendous construction going forward. Here the emphasis is on winter sports and many of the facilities will be ready for happy enthusiasts this winter. A tremendous ski lift is already in operation and the natural beauty of the area must be breathtaking when viewed from the vantage point of the ski lift gondolas.

These are only two examples that point up the fact that the real spirit of private enterprise and the desire to create and build remains alive.

The Hard Rock Poet

Rhyme - and Reason

By RUFUS L. PORTER

TERMINUS

The looters and the vultures now descend
Upon America once proud and great
To ravage our fair country end to end
From Bedloe's Island to the Golden Gate.
The promise of free circuses and bread,
That wrought the ruin of the Roman state,
Has proved too much for simple people led
By demagogues who now control our fate.
The end of liberty is now in view
For history will prove this forecast right.
America, I grieve for thee tonight.

Barnum was right when he said, "The people like to be humbugged." He was right again, apparently, when he said, "There's a fool born every minute." And Will Rogers was right in a motion picture in which he starred in the silent days when he finished Barnum's second quote thusly, "And most of them live."

In the gentle art of humbuggery Barnum would have to take a back seat in competition with our present-day politicians — and the people love it. They love it so much that they almost invariably vote into office the candidate who is the most adept at humbugging them.

Now, any man with a lick of sense knows the candidate can't begin to fulfill all his wondrous promises, or even one of them. He also knows that the government can't "give" anybody anything unless it robs somebody else in the process. He knows the government has produced only false prosperity — if it can be called that — and that it has greatly hindered real and lasting prosperity. He knows that the government has been leading us away from constitutional rights and guarantees, and into a collectivist, socialistic state of slavery under the pretext of "the common good."

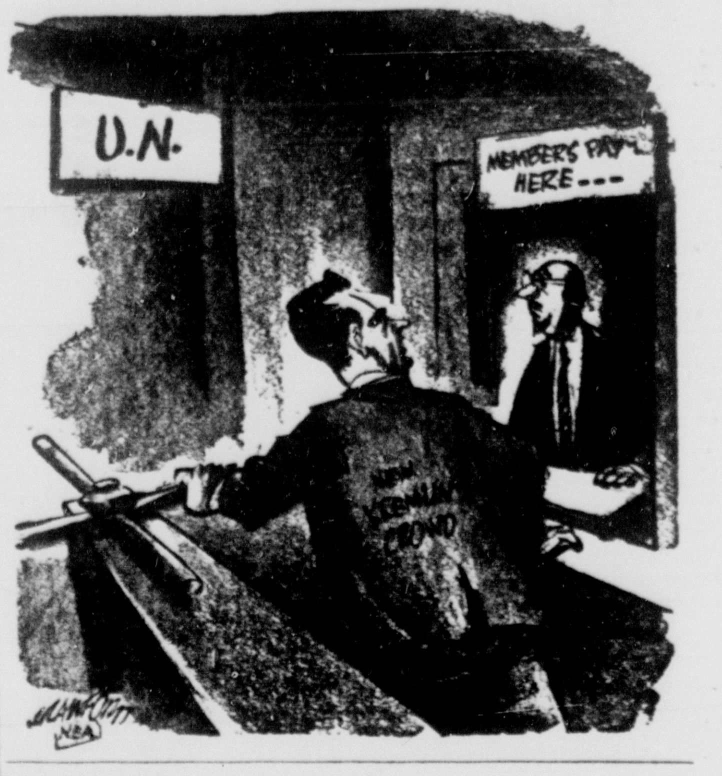
He knows that government, at best, is a "necessary evil" and at anything less than best it is pure tyranny. He knows all this, and yet he votes for more of it. He must indeed like to be humbugged. Many, many people often vote against their better judgment, knowing their man is a scoundrel, but hoping to gain something from his election. They disregard the harm they fear he may do the country in the long run in favor of some questionable "good" they hope he will do for them presently. Maybe Goldwater wasn't "right." But "in their hearts" the voters, a large majority of them, knew Johnson was wrong, and yet they voted for him.

Can it be that Aristotle was right when he said, "Some men are born to rule and some are born to be ruled"? I have denied this vehemently for many years, and the early history of our country seemed to disprove it. But lately I have begun to wonder. For 32 years now the populace has been asking for more and more governmental interference in their affairs. They have been asking for rule with a capital R. And they are getting what they ask for, and the most of them like it. They know they are being humbugged and that proves Barnum was right.

Well, it's all water over the dam now and we will have to make the best of what is most certain to prove a bad bargain. We may even have to face the fact of the loss of our national sovereignty and the prospect of becoming part of a world government dominated by the communist countries before the next four years have elapsed.

Some things are certain. We are headed for more home grown socialism, more regimentation, more demagoguery, more inflation, more unemployment, more crime, more immorality, in and out of government — and more votes for more of the same come next election.

"The Other Guy Said We Just Walk Right In"



Nation's Press

From Ft. Lauderdale (Fla.) Daily News

What may be the opening gun of a determined effort to impose a state income tax in Florida was sounded recently at a meeting in Tampa. It was predicted by several speakers at the gathering, called to consider state revenue needs, that a tax on income "must" soon be levied in Florida. This state is one of the few in the nation which does not have a state income tax.

An increase of $50 million, more or less, in the annual cost of the minimum foundation program for support of public schools was cited. This increase is likely in the near future, it was said. The constantly increasing demand for higher education, with resulting climb in expenditures for colleges and universities was also mentioned as "reasons" why Florida "must" join the parade of states levying an income tax.

We should be thankful the legislature cannot impose such a levy, despite the tremendous pressures for additional funds which will be exerted at the 1965 session by lobbies for schools and colleges. The Florida constitution bans the state imposition of an income tax and this restriction cannot be removed except by vote of the people at a statewide referendum.

Granted there are pressing needs for additional funds for education and other worthy purposes which must be met, yet there is no need to levy a state income tax. The absence of such a tax in Florida has been a major factor in the postwar growth of the state. Many persons, weary of paying state and city income taxes, in addition to the federal levy, have moved here.

They have transferred their holdings to Florida, adding tremendously to the wealth of the state. Many commercial ventures, providing employment for thousands of persons and sizeable chunks of tax revenues for state, county, city and school purposes, are the direct result of the absence of an income tax in Florida. We should remove the constitutional restriction against such a levy only after long and careful consideration and to meet a very pressing need.

SALES TAX

To the Editor:

The sales tax ought not to be allowed. The mayor and all the council that voted for this abomination should be displaced bodily from city hall and denied all access to future business with the city. Our forefathers defied the king of England for a less tax than this one, and a tax that did not require a bookkeeper in every business to furnish records of every business. If the businessmen will band together and refuse to comply with this outrageous law, there could be nothing done about it, because there would not be enough room in the jails to accommodate the crowd, and not enough lawyers to prosecute them.

One remedy would be to take all the advertising from the radio and TV stations and do it the right way in newspapers, where the ads are plainly marked and can be verified after the words on radio and TV are lost in the air.

The city can cut their expenses a lot if they want to do it. They don't need so much new parks, and expensive new park superintendent. I have noticed that there is never a crowded park in the city. Most of the time they are empty. The swimming in the lake could be disposed of with great benefit to all who patronize it. Many of the propositions for increased parks are just the dreams of do-gooders that don't seem to know that we have not the time or the inclination to spend a lot of time in parks. Our streets are wide and well tree-lined and, as I well know, hardly anyone walks on the wide sidewalks. Everyone is doing what he wants to do and will do even after all the new parks are in use. This city will never be a Chicago, because Prospect Lake is not big enough for ocean-going traffic.

If the mayor will notice, there has been lots of improvements in the city before he arrived in his present position, and it was done without his present prominence.

I have a suspicion that the city manager is favorable to the new tax, as he has been in favor of all the increases in spending for years. Why should he be the head of all the businesses the city is engaged in? Haven't the other men in the city departments brains enough for each to manage his part of the job?

When water is wanted, it is found across many mountains, while our water close by is sold to others. Our water comes slowly at a cost of millions and then in partnership with other cities, and the danger of breaks along the pipelines, and breaks in dams that could cause millions in damage suits. If we get the water okay, we will have to foot the bill.

To get back to this tax: We should trim the budget, and not make a new, unjust tax for parks that will be used little, for with our mountain resorts close by, people will go to them in preference to the best parks that can be provided. Parks never brought prosperity to a city. In fact, the biggest park I know of in our big New York is a menace to anyone who ventures in it after dark, and is not too safe in daylight. Our Monument Park is fine as a view-point to see the mountains. For a couple miles it runs along the stream, and it is deserted most of the time. I have walked through it many times from Penrose Hospital to Uintah bridge, and seldom passed a single person walking, and sure there is no driving because the entrance at Uintah has a chain locked across it to keep out autos or horses. That is how bad we need more parks. That is really a picturesque park, too, and such wonderful views to the west.

We need economy in government, not new taxes, and new attractions that do not attract any but a lot of seekers after new jobs, and grafting leaders in spending.

Wit and Whimsy

Judge: "The jury having acquitted you of the charge of bigamy, you are free to leave the court and go home."

Prisoner: "Thank you, your honor, but I want to be on the safe side — which home?"

The Miracle at Flushing Meadows

By FRED G. CLARK and R. S. RIMANOCZY

Human progress frequently occurs when least expected. The New York World's Fair pavilion voted least likely to succeed (by people who hoped it would) is the Hall of Free Enterprise where the principal exhibits feature (1) the nature of job security, (2) how goods are produced and exchanged in a free society, and (3) who gets how much of the income of American corporations.

The pessimism was based on the feeling that people who go to Fairs are in no mood to spend time learning about economics.

Yet, during the 1964 season of the Fair, almost a million people walked in and spent an estimated average of 24 minutes looking and listening.

Size for size, this number of visitors per square foot was greater than most of the larger, more widely publicized exhibits.

If there had been more room, there would have been more visitors.

What does this prove ?

It proves, for the first time, that economic principles, simply expressed and dramatically presented, have a wide mass appeal even when in competition with pure entertainment.

How can this be explained?

The crowd reactions indicate that most people realize economic policies have a great effect on their welfare (both present and future) and, given the opportunity, are eager to learn if that learning is, at the same time, interesting.

The most impressive reaction came from professional educators who visited the pavilion

From them came the phrase, "instant learning," which is a rare compliment and only a slight exaggeration.

The speed with which the principles can be grasped is explained by the fact that the presentations are built entirely upon everyday facts with which the audience cannot help but be familiar.

Things that people already know are put together in new patterns and take on new and larger meaning.

Why is this important?

It is of the greatest importance because the future of the free world, operating under universal suffrage, depends upon the wisdom and self-restraint of the citizens.

The ever-present temptation and opportunity to vote themselves "something for nothing" has, historically, brought on the downfall of free societies.

The Hall of Free Enterprise represents a break-through in informal, entertaining, citizenship education that is attracting international attention and can become the foundation of a new and more stable platform for successful self-government in a confused and erratic world.

Question Box

Question No. 608: "Journalists ask for preferred treatment at news scenes because they are 'the watchdogs of the people.' Why in the weeks since the Warren commission's report on Kennedy's assassination was issued, hasn't one of these watchdogs found out what Earl Warren meant when he said some information wouldn't be revealed in our lifetime?"

Answer: Some news people do seem to think they are entitled to special treatment. As a matter of fact they are not entitled to any special privileges. As a part of the population they are entitled only to the same treatment accorded any other individuals.

As to why they have not asked more questions of Earl Warren about what he meant, we are not qualified to say.

Since Earl Warren has indicated from past actions that he believes there are public matters about which the people are not entitled to know, it is only natural that he would withhold data from the people. It will be remembered that when he left the office of governor of California he ordered sealed his official papers. Recently it was disclosed that he had ordered them to remain secret until after his death.

Questions are limited to general human relations questions that will improve the well-being of all mankind on this earth.

QUICK QUIZ

A—Mecca.

MY ANSWER

by Billy Graham

© 1964 by Chicago Tribune
N.Y. News Syndicate, Inc.

QUESTION: I heard one of your sermons on TV recently, and it really made me search my heart. I must admit I did not like all I discovered about myself because of this; but still I try to live a good life. The idea of belonging to a church to become a better person seems weak to me. Can't I improve without the help of a church? —Mrs. E.

ANSWER: If you were hungry, you would go to a good restaurant. If you were ill, you would go to the doctor. If you had car trouble, you would not be reluctant to take it to a garage. Then, why should you be so reluctant to go to church?

The church is the place where an atmosphere of worship exists. It is a place dedicated to the nourishment of souls. It is a place where the Word of God is read, and where sincere prayers are prayed. It is the logical place for a Christian to find encouragement, fellowship, and strength.

It may be possible for you to be a Christian and not go to church, but barring physical impairment, you would not be an obedient Christian.

It is possible that something may have happened at your church which has caused you to avoid going. If it is your fault, ask forgiveness. If it is something beyond your control, seek another place of worship. But go to church.

QUESTION: I find the Bible verse Revelation 1:8 difficult to understand. Will you please explain it? —S.T.

ANSWER: Alpha is the first letter in the Greek Alphabet, and Omega is the last. If you read the remainder of the verse you will find an explanttion. "Saith the Lord, which "is," and which "was", and which "is to come." " Before the universe existed God "was;" He "is" now, at this present time, and always shall be. It is difficult for finite minds to grasp such infiniteness, and for that reason God has given us the supporting statements of Scripture. These are the sure handles by which we lay hold on great, eternal truths.

Thomas Chalmers once said: "The sum and substance of the preparation needed for a coming eternity is, that we believe what the Bible tells us, and do what the Bible bids us."

The more we doubt the Bible the less awareness we have of eternity, and the more we believe it, the more conscious we are of the vast unknown to which no sane man would venture without God.

QUESTION: My pastor once made the remark that "love and grace were the two greatest words in the Bible". Do you think he is right about this? I wanted to question him about this but never was able to get up enough nerve. —Sandy W.

ANSWER: I agree with your pastor! There are many great and wonderful words in the Bible, but the two words, "Love" and "Grace" are two of the most significant and meaningful in the Scriptures. They bespeak the mercy and compassion of God, and reveal the scope of his forgiveness.

The word "Grace" as used in the Scriptures has no counterpart in human relationships. When we say that a person is graceful, we refer to physical adroitness, but when we speak of the amazing Grace of our heavenly Father, we refer to a quality of love and compassion unknown on the human level.

But Grace and Love, as related to God, are more than words—they are attributes that draw us to the Cross of Christ where we behold God's love and grace demonstrated in a way we can grasp. As the Scriptures say: "For ye know the Grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be made rich." These words clearly show that God, in the redemption of the Cross, has done something for us that we could not do for ourselves.

Swords must give way to ploughshares, and Spears must be refashioned into Pruning-hooks. Hatchets must be buried, and rifles converted into crosses. We must oppose, with all our might, the antagonisms that are growing between peoples of the earth. International conflict must be solved; world peace must come. May we have an Armistice of long duration. Manitou to Consider Water Rate Increase Proposal

This informal meeting of the water committee, at 1 p.m. in Memorial Hall, was announced Friday, during a regular council meeting, by Mayor L. Longaker.

The last public discussions of water rate increases were at hearings on the 1965 city budget. At the Oct. 6 council meeting, it was proposed to up the flat water rate from $3.57 to $5, the minimum meter rate the same amount and charge 10 per cent more on other metered water.

In the past, city officials and the water commissioner have pointed out that the water department has not paid its way.

It was suggested by the mayor at the Friday meeting that the cost of maintaining the Manitou dump should be assumed less by the taxpayers and more by commercial haulers and property owners adjacent, but outside Manitou city limits. The possibility of a landfill projects with dump material was discussed.

A letter was read from the Colorado Municipal League, quoting a $2,800 price tag for recodifying city ordinances.

"This is probably the best proposition we've got and the best one we're going to get," said City Attorney Blakemore McCarty.

The mayor said that J. Bell, head of the Municipal League, told him Manitou is not ready for home rule city status for several years. An advisory question on home rule for Manitou was turned down by the voters by a slim margin last year.

The Canon Lounge, 730 Manitou Ave., which had a city council hearing several months ago on its operations after complaints of local residents, was issued a new license Friday.

This license was for "The Key Lounge," for Miss Janet L. Knight. It was pointed out the former operators were no longer in business.

Council approved an ordinance on second reading on coin operated machines.

When no persons in the audience objected to the ordinance, it was pointed out that "Bingo" Jack Kerns and other persons with coin operated amusement devices in the downtown Arcade had been notified that the ordinance would be read. The ordinance has some restrictions on young persons operating amusement devices.

There was a second reading of an ordinance to transfer $3,000 from the sanitary and sewer fund to the water fund.

Approval was given to blacktopping Old Man's Trail. It was reported that the Sundown Lounge management will stand most of the bill. A small triangular piece of city park land was recently removed from this road.

Council also voted to remove a center island at Duclo and Pawnee Avenues. The possibility of making Duclo a one-way westbound road from Pawnee to Navajo was discussed.

A resident complained that garbage was being burned in a pit in the middle of a public street. He was referred by the council to municipal court.

Regarding garbage pits, overextended retaining walls and other extensions on public roads, the city attorney said they are ". . .all over the city."

Municipal Court Judge Allan Asher told Scott Ashlock Friday that he didn't care how the 18-year old youth got to work, "but you'll not get there behind the wheel of a car."

Ashlock, 1430 W. Pikes Peak Ave., had been cited for speeding and reckless driving by Patrolman Larry Caster Oct. 11.

The officer said Ashlock was first observed "squeeling" around the corner from Wahsatch onto Pikes Peak Avenue. He took chase and clocked the youth in excess of 60 miles from the 2100 to the 2600 block, he said. Ashlock also entered the crosswalk at Circle Drive as the light turned to red, at a speed Caster said was 40 miles an hour. "We followed him for two blocks with the red light on," the officer said, "and had to put the siren on before he finally stopped."

Judge Asher found Ashlock guilty of reckless driving, levied a $100 fine, and suspended his right to drive in the city for 90 days.

Reminding the youth that last year he had been sentenced to jail for driving under a suspension, Judge Asher said he would not "tolerate" any more driving as had been testified to by the officer.

When Ashlock protested that he couldn't get transportation to his job at the Air Force Academy, the judge said he didn't care how he got to work, but he wouldn't get there behind the wheel of a car.

"My car is parked across the street," the youth said, "how will I get it home?"

The judge said he could make arrangements for a friend to drive it home. Ashlock protested that he might get a meter violation, and Judge Asher said: "Then you'll have to pay it."

Charles May, 24, Anchorage, Alaska, was found guilty of a careless driving charge but his $15 fine was suspended.

Mrs. Barbara Payne, 26, 522 Huron Rd., pleaded guilty to failing to yield the right of way and was fined $15 with $10 suspended.

The case of William Giani, Sasusalito, Calif., was continued until Nov. 11. He is charged with parking on the wrong side of the street.

Fines were levied on others who pleaded guilty to traffic charges as follows: Ricky Bishop, 18, 1710 W. St. Vrain St., $50, reckless driving, with $25 suspended on condition he attends the traffic lecture Nov. 18, and does not drive in the city for 20 days;

Rochelle Dammann, 21, 1009 E. Columbia St., $15, careless driving; Samuel Hopper, 42, Manitou Springs, $25, disobeying a traffic sign; Howard Rieck, 58, 830 S. Hancock Ave., $15, taking the right of way;

Robert Hopfer, 24, 134 N. Che

Robert Hopfer, 24, 134 N. Chestnut St., $25, speeding, and $25, careless driving, with his right to drive in the city suspended for 20 days.

School Boards Group to Meet At Broadmoor

The Colorado Association of School Boards, in conjunction with the Colorado Association of School Administrators, will meet at the Broadmoor International Center Monday and Tuesday.

The first general session will get underway Monday at 9 a.m. with Walter T. Zimmerman, president of CASB presiding. The address, "Can Our System of Public Education Keep Us Free?" will be given by Dr. Darrell Holmes, president of the Colorado State College.

A "reaction panel" will discuss Dr. Holmes' address and following the panel the remainder of the morning session will be taken up with specific discussion groups.

Gov. John A. Love will be the featured speaker at the joint luncheon of the two groups at noon Monday.

Monday afternoon's specific activities will include a series of special interest clinics dealing with specific problems in the field of public education.

At the banquet on Monday night the featured speaker will be W. David Slawson, a member of the Warrren Commission Council.

The second general session, beginning at 9 a.m. Tuesday will include an address by Dr. Stephen Romine, dean of the School of Education of the University of Colorado. Dr. Romine will speak on "Working With Certified Personnel" and will be followed by a series of other speakers on the same topic and by a general audience participation discussion.

After a joint luncheon and an address by Dr. William R. Hochman chairman of the Colorado College Department of Education, and business sessions, the meeting of the joint associations will adjourn.

Deadline Set For Police Applications

Men in the 21-30 year old age bracket have only another week to apply for jobs on the Colorado Springs police department.

Applications to take a written civil service examination must be filed on or before 5 p.m. Nov. 13 at the City Hall office of C. L. Heitmen Jr., city personnel director.

The written test will be given in the main arena of the City Auditorium at 7 p.m. Nov. 19, with successful applicants to take follow-up physical and oral examinations.

Applicants must be at least 5 feet 9 inches tall, weigh at least 140 pounds and must have completed at least two years of high school. Copies of birth certificates and high school credits must be furnished with applications.

The current civil service eligibility list is almost depleted. It is hoped that several men will be added to the police department next year since it is operating with far less men than considered necessary by Police Chief Cecil J. McKissick. The department is now at its authorized strength of 108.

Further information on the examinations may be obtained by contacting Heitman's office on the top floor of City Hall.

Wasson Captures SCL Crown

Florence Wins PPL Title, 20-0

By MORRIS FRASER
Gazette Telegraph Sports Writer

FLORENCE — Florence unleashed Dick Shadwell for two first quarter touchdowns Friday night, then held on for dear life and the Pikes Peak League championship with a 20-0 victory over Fountain.

Florence won the PPL title with a perfect 7-0 record Fountain dropped to third with 5-2. Salida finished second with a 6-1 mark. The Huskies will meet Del Norte next week in the State Class - AA playoffs.

Fountain went to the airways after being forced to punt twice in the initial period. Quarterback Brian O'Neill riddled the Florence's weak pass defense for 10 completions and 98 yards. Jim Daniels added four completions for 92 yards.

But Fountain never crossed the Huskie goal. The Trojans made their best bid in the second quarter as O'Neill and Daniels used two passes to go from their own 17 to the Huskie 20. A 14-yarder from O'Neill to Daniels was complete at the six as the half ended.

Florence drove 59 yards to score the first time it had the ball. Shadwell broke for the final 14 yards. The Trojans were forced to punt following the kickoff and Florence again scored as Shadwell went 58 yards down the left side.

Neither team could score in a wild third quarter. But midway through the fourth period Ray Moore struggled for eight and the final score.

The third period was a hodgepodge of ball exchanges. Florence was forced to punt after three downs and then forced Fountain to punt i nturn.

On Florence's first play Moore fumbled to Fountain but Shadwell intercepted an O'Neill pass immediately afterwards. On On Florence's second play Mo fumbled again and Fountain ran three plays before Huskie Paul Hardrick intercepted a pass and immediately fumbled the ball back to Fountain.

In all, the ball changed hands nine times during the third period.

Shadwell was the game's leading rusher with 172 127 yards. Despite his fumbles, Moore had 78 yards. Fountain finished with minus 15 yards rushing but gained 190 through the air.

Patriots Tumble Oilers

BOSTON (AP) — Gino Cappelletti kicked a 42-yard field goal on the last play of the game to give the Boston Patriots a 25-24 victory over the Houston Oilers Friday night and keep them in contention for the American Football League Eastern Division crown.

One second was showing on the clock after quarterback Babe Parilli, who couldn't find a receiver for a desperation pass, ran the ball into Houston territory and jumped out of bounds.

The patriots appeared to have lost the game when George Blanda kicked a field goal for the Oilers with 32 seconds left, giving Houston a 24-22 lead. Blanda's boot was from the 10 after cracks at the Boston line failed to produce a touchdown from the four.

Boston had scored with 3:58 left of the wild windup as Parilli rolled out to the right and bulled across from the five. The Patriots tried for a two-point conversion to be sure a field goal wouldn't cost them the game but a pass to Art Graham fell incomplete.

Salida Bombards Manitou Springs In Pikes Peak League Finale, 30-0

By DICK FOSTER

Salida's visiting Spartans unleashed a powerful line attack and produced some fine running to smother the Mustangs of Manitou 30-0 Friday night. Awesome was the only word to describe Salida's Mustang-ripping line.

Shooting constantly through large holes produced by that bull-dozing group, Keith Baker along with fullback Ken Williams and Pat Woods piled up 329 Spartan yards. Baker did 134 yards of damage himself, and Williams and Woods went for 89 and 84 yards respectively.

Manitou was jammed by Spartan defense which appeared almost savage at times. The leading Mustang, John Moore, could pick up only 57 yards all night, and the whole squad went for less than 130 net yards.

Salida first got on the scoreboard with 19 first quarter seconds remaining, when Baker broke open for a 38 yard touchdown trip. Baker added the second Spartan tally midway in the second period with a seven yard run, and three minutes later Norm Williams passed to Len Bustos who romped 80 yards for the 18-0 halftime count.

Manitou, whose squad had been well shredded by a thorough Spartan team in the first half, was able to re-group their forces and manage some ball control and a little stiffer defense in the second half.

The Spartans narrowly missed a six pointer when Ken Williams, speeding for home early in the third period dropped the ball on Manitou's 18 and the Mustangs took over to eat up the quarter. Salida swept for two final tallies in the fourth frame. The first came on Baker's third tally of the evening, a six yard run.

To complete Manitou's beating, Rick Wilson, a Salida secondary picked off a John Fletcher aerial on the Mustang 34 and got to the 22 with it. Pat Woods rammed it across on the next play.

Bullets Top Royals

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Baltimore bullets built up a nine-point lead late in the fourth quarter Friday night and held on for a 111-106 National Basketball Association victory over the Cincinnati Royals, playing without Oscar Robertson.

It was just too much Walt Bellamy, Gus Johnson and Bailey Howell for the Royals. The trio scored 77 of the Bullets' 111 points and picked off 51 of the team's 71 rebounds. Bellamy was high with 30 points.

The Royals ran off 10 straight points while holding the Bullets scoreless to take a 13-4 lead in the first quarter. But Baltimore kept pecking away and Cincinnati led only 20-17 at the end of the period.

The score changed hands several times in the second and third quarter, with the Royals on top 75-73 at the end of the third. Howell broke a tie with about six minutes left in the game and Baltimore kept its lead.

Thunderbirds Clinch Title With Trinidad Win, 25-6

By TOM CUSHMAN
Gazette Telegraph Sports Writer

TRINIDAD — Wasson mashed Trinidad before a pair of first quarter touchdowns here Friday night and then breezed to a 25-6 triumph that rewarded Gib Funk's hard-hitting Thunderbirds with their second South Central League championship in three seasons.

The victory, Wasson's sixth in its past seven games, clinched the SCL crown for the Colorado Springs team, regardless of the outcome of this afternoon's conference windup between Pueblo East and Palmer. The Eagles, pre-season favorites in the southern AAA league, had retained a chance for a title tie going into the weekend but a Wasson defeat on this Trinidad field Friday was a necessary ingredient and the poised Thunderbirds wiped out any chance of that before the contest was a quarter old.

The triumph leaves Wasson with a 6-4 mark for the regular season and propelles the suddenly potent SCL representative into the quarter-finals of the State-AAA playoffs next Saturday afternoon at Wasson Stadium against the winner of today's Cheyenne Mountain-La Junta contest in La Junta. It will be the second post-season appearance for a Wasson team in the school's six-year history. The T-Birds lost to Lakewood, 27-10, in the semi-finals two years ago.

Standout quarterback Jim Smith was again the dominate figure in the Thunderbird attack Friday night, rushing for 110 yards in 16 carries, scoring one touchdown, and passing for another. Smith's heroics were complemented by Bob Toof who scored twice, intercepted a pair of passes, and rushed for 51 yards in nine trips.

Wasson's victory was accomplished despite a whopping 170 yards in penalties. Two of the infractions nullified apparant touchdowns which came on interceptions, one by Toof and another by Smith. Trinidad lost most of the advantage gained in that department, however, by handing over six fumbles.

The T-Birds reverted to a play that had failed against Palmer a week earlier to set up the first touchdown Friday night. Trinidad, sparked by a 26-yard run by quarterback Mike Bosso, moved its own 28 to the Wasson 31 after capturing the opening kickoff but surrendered the ball at that point on downs.

Following a pair of thrusts and through the line, which produced a first down at the 46, Smith's dropped back and hit halfback Rick Donaldson with a pass on the sidelines that carried to the Trinidad six. It was the same play which Wasson had used unsuccessfully on its first down from scrimmage against Palmer last Saturday.

From that point it took the Birds on two carries to bang into the endzone. Smith slipped to the three on the first try and Toof sliced across the goalline on the next play. Smith then ran the extra point on a keeper.

Wasson reclaimed the ball shortly afterwards when Mike Johnston captured a Trinidad fumble at the Miners' 36 and the Birds quickly rolled into the endzone again. An eight-yard burst by Smith and an 11-yard scamper Bruce Meade set up the touchdown which Toof carried over from the one-yard line with 1:58 left in the first period. Another run attempt for the extra point failed.

Late in the second period Toof wrecked a Trinidad drive by intercepting a pass at his own 36 and returning it for an apparent touchdown, only to have it called back by a clipping penalty. Trinidad moved to the Wasson 44 shortly before intermission but ran out of downs and the Birds then took care of the final few seconds remaining on the clock.

The Miners had a pair of drives into Wasson territory in the third period but a pass interception, againt by Toff, and a fumble recovery stalled both.

Then, early in the final period, Trinidad fielded a punt at its own 14 and Bosso, fading to pass, was smacked hard. The resulting fumble was recovered by Larry Schwartz at the Trinidad seven and on the first play following Smith faked into the line and rolled around the left side for an easy score. Charlie Steel's extra point attempt was blocked.

The Miners handed over the ball again on a bobble two plays after the kick-off with Schwartz again landing on the pigskin. This time, following an illegal procedure play, Wasson moved across in five plays. A Smith roll-out carried 19 yards to the Miners' 12 on the key play but a clipping penalty moved the ball back to the 28. Two cracks through the line gained to the 13 from where Smith fired a pass up the middle to Mike Martin who made a brilliant catch at the three and stepped into the endzone. Budgie Hamilton's extra point attempt was wide to the left.

Trinidad then came back to score late in the quarter on a 65-yard drive following a fumble recovery. George Salvatore ran the ball across from two yards out against the Thunderbird reserves, but it was far too late to halt the late season express that produced the second conference championship for the northside school.

Will Rogers League All-Conference Teams

By CHARLIE REUX
Gazette Telegraph Sports Writer

The league champion Cheyenne Mountain and runner-up Air Academy High dominated the voting for the 1964 Will Rogers League All-Conference first team with the Indians getting five players on the first unit while the Academy High team placed four on the WRL team.

Canon City and Widefield got the other two nominations for the first team.

The voting was limited to only the five WRL coaches and they were restricted from voting for their own respective players.

Don Stimack's Canon City gridders made a strong showing towards the end of the WRL season and despite the fact they only registered one victory they were a better team than their record indicates. The Tigers dominated the WRL second team, getting four players nominated.

With the exception of Cheyenne's Greg Cramblit, fullback; Bill Wood, Academy High halfback; Cheyenne's end Bill Massarand; and Academy High's Rudy Hallenbeck, the voting for the other players on the WRL first team was close. All four players were unanimously selected to the first unit.

The other seven positions on the WRL first team was decided by a narrow margin and in some cases, the selection was decided by a single vote.

Cheyenne's Craig Fay is the only underclassman on the first unit. Fay is a junior at Cheyenne and will return for another season of action on the gridiron. All others on the first unit are seniors.

Cramblit Tops Voting

Greg Cramblit, who has developed into one of the finest fullbacks to come from this area, was the overwhelming selection for the Will Rogers League's Most Valuable Player and first team fullback.

Cramblit was instrumental in giving the Cheyenne Mountain football team the first WRL championship undefeated. The lumbering 198-pound fullback scored 11 touchdowns to win the WRL individual scoring race; six TDs ahead of the runner-up Dennis Meese of Canon City.

In nine games this season, Cramblit scored 20 touchdowns to pace the Indians to a 7-2 won-loss record. In the WRL finale last weekend against Canon City, Cramblit scored all five TDs for the Indians.

Cramblit also led the WRL circuit in rushing with 1,024 net yards gained in nine outings for a 113-yard average per game clip.

Barickman is a former University of Missouri freshman coach, serving in that position for four years, and he played his varsity football at Missouri as an interior lineman.

CC's Tigers Seek First Win Against Doane College Tonite

CRETE, NEB. — Colorado College's defeat-plagued football team hopes to find relief in this southeastern Nebraska city tonight when the Tigers meet Doane College in their final road contest of the 1964 season.

The Colorado Springs' team, loser of seven straight extending back through the final game of last season, will be facing the last club to be defeated by a Tiger grid squad. CC downed Doane 15-8 in its semi-final contest a year ago.

Tonight's game, which is scheduled for 8, is considered a toss-up.

Scores against common opponents this fall indicate that the host club and CC are evenly matched. Doane has dropped decisions to Hastings College, 24-12, Nebraska Wesleyan 14-0, and Concordia Teachers College, 26-6. CC lost to Hastings 21-12, to Wesleyan 40-7, and to Concordia 12-0. However, Doane has the better overall record with a 2-5-1 mark as compared to the 0-6 of the Tigers. But CC's opposition has generally been stronger.

Coach Jerry Carle and a 35 man squad departed Friday for Crete, which is some 20 miles south of Lincoln. The CC head man said early in the week that the Tigers should be in their best physical shape since the start of the campaign. An open date last week following the 42-0 loss to Santa Clara gave Carle an opportunity to schedule a wound-healing layoff of three days. Only quarterback Mike Denson was listed as doubtful after a scrimmage-incurred shoulder injury, but he is still scheduled as the team's starting signal-caller tonight.

Denson will have one new mate in the backfield in 170 pound speedster, Ron Taylor. The Enid, Okla. athlete has impressed the CC staff with his hard work in recent weeks and he is slated to open at left-halfback this evening. Sophomores Bob Stapp from Lakewood and Ray Jones of Pueblo are scheduled for their regular starting roles at right-half and fullback respectively.

Across the line the Tigers will open with Bill Jankowski and Bill Muller at ends, Bill Jacobson and Dave Hayes at tackles, Harry Intemann and Bob Bishop at guards, and Jim Garcia at center.

As has been the problem throughout the season, the Tigers will enter tonight's fray seeking a solution to an offense that has refused to move. In the six games, CC has managed only four touchdowns and has been shut out three times. The passing game has been only sporatic, yielding by 5.5 yards per completion, and the ground attack is virtually non-existent. Jones, who is the leading rusher, still has a measly 168 yards in the six outings, an average of less than 30 per game.

If Denson is physically sound tonight, he may continue to lift the CC offense as he has shown signs of doing since assuming the quarterbacking chores three games ago. In those last contests, he has turned up a total offense of over 100 yards per game.

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The American League at a summit meeting Friday approved a strong series of recommendations for the future of baseball.

They included:

1. Restoration of full power to the commissioner.

2. A revolutionary free agent draft similar to that used by professional football.

3. A change in World Series play providing for night games.

The full power proposal stemmed from a warning by Commissioner Ford Frick that the major league club owners must give his successor as much authority as that given to Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, the game's first czar.

Frick, commissioner since 1951, will step down from his $65,000-a-year job next September. The voting for his successor is scheduled to take place next summer.

Landis had autocratic powers to impose penalties for what he judged to be acts detrimental to the sport.

A. B. (Happy) Chandler, who succeeded Landis, and Frick, who followed Chandler, were stripped of this authority by two constitutional changes.

One gave the owners the right of court appeal against the commissioner, and the other provided that no act or procedure agreed upon by the owners could be construed as detrimental to baseball.

These restrictions, Frick argued, limited the authority of the commissioner to act positively in such operational problems as expansion, transfer of franchises and handling of television and radio problems.

"The new commissioner must be elected as a representative of the baseball public," said Joe Cronin, president of the American League. "The elimination of the clauses which reduced his powers would result in restoration of full power with unlimited jurisdiction over all aspects of baseball."

The American was the first of the two circuits to conclude its separate league meeting. A statement was expected from the National at the conclusion of its session.

Cronin emphasized that these were only recommendations. They must be voted upon by both the majors and the minors at the annual winter league meetings in Houston starting Nov. 30 before they could become baseball law.

The free agent draft plan, coupled with an unrestricted draft of all players in the minor leagues, was recommended to the owners by the general managers at a three-day conference at Ligonier, Pa., last week. If adopted, it will replace the first year player bonus rule which has been in effect since 1961.

In a nutshell, the free agent plan calls for a draft of all high school graduates, American Legion players and college athletes. This draft would be held every six months. Existing laws which restrict a high school player from being signed until after his class graduates and a college player until after his sophomore year, would be kept in force.

The unrestricted draft makes all players eligible to be selected by the majors for a stipulated sum not carried on the big league 40-player reserve list.

The recommendation to change the World Series set-up was made at the suggestion of Charles Finley, owner of the Kansas City Athletics. If adopted, it would not go into effect until 1966.

The recommendation asked that consideration be given to starting the World Series on a Saturday, instead of Wednesday. It also suggested the starting time of the non-weekend games be at the discretion of the home team.

"The purpose of this would be to allow more fans across the country to see the World Series on television and listen to it on the radio," said Cronin.

Asked whether this meant that it was possible for weekday games to be played at night, Cronin said:

"That would be the prerogative of the home club, depending on the factors involved."

These factors would include weather and location.

The American League also approved a plan for recruiting, development and procurement of umpires. The chief purpose would be to encourage top-grade umpire prospects to come into professional baseball.

Another recommendation was for all of baseball's top officials to be housed under one roof. This would include the commissioner, the two league presidents and the head of the National Association (minor leagues) It was suggested that the location, preferably be in one of the two-team major league cities — New York, Chicago or Los Angeles.

Harnisch Retains PBA Lead

GARDEN CITY, N.Y. (AP) — Tom Harnisch of Buffalo, N.Y., retained the lead in the $60,000 Professional Bowlers Association national championship Friday with a 30-game total of 6,517 pins, an average of 217.

He rolled games of 246-226-268-192-226-209 in his 1,368 six-game block to lead a field of 48 in the night semifinals.

Jim Robinette of Falls Church Va., took over second place from Bill Bunetta of Fresno, Calif. Robinette rolled a 1,351 for a 6,465 total, Bunetta a 1,278 for 6,402.

Earl Johnson of Minneapolis was fourth with 6,389 followed by Skip Vigars of Albany, N.Y. 6,371 and Bob Strampe of Detroit 6,368.

Dick Weber of St. Louis, 6,344; Billy Golembiewski of Detroit, 6,342; Mike Samarzija of Pontiac, Mich. 6,338, and Harry Smith of Baltimore, 6,335, rounded out the top 10 after the afternoon quarter-finals.

Defending champion Billy Hardwick of San Mateo, Calif. continued to stay in contention.

Going into Friday's session, Hardwick was in 78th position, having just barely survived Thursday's cut to 96. The 23-year old Californian started with a 256 and a 227, faded to 191 and 164, came back with 204, and then in his final afternoon game, facing almost certain elimination, came up with a 234. It enabled him to remain in contention by just two pins.

Terrors to Attack Eagles' Saddle-T

By MORRIS FRASER

Gazette Telegraph Sports Writer

Palmer's starting offensive lineup, for the first time this season, is composed entirely of seniors, and the Terrors Will face another squad of seniors today at 2 p.m. as they host Pueblo East.

The one addition to Palmer's lineup, making it an all-senior group, is 180-pound halfback Bob Wake.

Wake sat out the first seven games this year with an injured leg, and did not play in 1963. But the hard-running senior has accounted for better than 60 yards in limited action against Trinidad and Wasson, and will be counted on to handle much of the Palmer ground attack.

In all, the Terrors will gradate 20 seniors who are playing their last high school game. Eleven of these have played a great deal of offense for Palmer this season.

East also is presenting an all-senior lineup, led by another halfback who has been injured, 175-pound Jim Selak. Selak is the most dangerous runner from East's side-saddle T offense. He also is one of the league's best linebackers.

Another East running threat is halfback Ed Griego, who is tied for the scoring lead in the SCL. Griego has great speed.

Although East is primarily a ground-based unit, Palmer coach Bill Westbay warns not to take its normally-dormant passing game lightly.

"They had Griego out in the open against Trinidad and just didn't connect down the middle. With their speed, they can be dangerous."

Palmer's defensive line has been tough as a year-old steak all year, but the defensive backfield will get a lot of the action today, Westbay feels.

"I wish we had more speed in our backfield. Selak and Griego are very fast. If they get outside, I doubt we'll have the speed to stop them easily."

The side saddle T offense may help the Terrors somewhat. It is fairly easy to diagnose and could give the Palmer line an extra moment to get into the Eagle backfield. The offense, similar to the single wing, is slow-developing, a help to a charging line, but a hindrance to any lineman who reacts too fast.

"East's offense will take a while to get started," says Westbay. "I feel we may have trouble if some of our linemen come through quickly and react before they see where the play is going. They may get pushed out of position."

East's own defense is strong against rushing. The Eagles didn't allow a touchdown in their first three games and have given up only 45 points in six SCL starts.

A factor which should weigh in Palmer's favor is that this is the first league game East has played outside of Pueblo this fall. The last time the Eagles flew the coop was against Ft. Collins Poudre back in September.

AFA Has Icers, Coach but No Rink

There isn't an ice rink at the Air Force Academy but there are hockey teams and an experienced coach.

S. Sgt. William H. Dickson, NCOIC Cadet Pay and Records Section, Commandant of Cadets, coaches and referees cadet ice hockey tilts during his off-duty time.

He's no tyro at the ice sport either.

Sgt. Dickson has been plastering a puck since he was 14. He was named to the Greater Boston Scholastic All-Star Hockey Team while a student at the Bean Town's Arlington High.

After graduating, the Boston born hockey enthusiast played for some of the better semi-pro teams in the Massachusetts area.

Although he narrowly missed a berth on the 1952 Olympic squad, Sgt. Dickson was named to tour Japan with the New York City All-Stars on a State Department sponsored trip.

After entering the Air Force in 1953, the sergeant swapped his hockey stick for a softball bat and proved equally as skilled with that tool.

In addition to working with cadet hockey squads, Sgt. Dickson has found time to play on the COC championship softball team. He was also named an alternate for the base squad.

Harvard Runner Sets New Cross Country Record

NEW YORK (AP) — Walter Hewlett of Harvard broke the meet record in the 26th annual Heptagonal Games Association cross country championships Friday with a clocking of 25:03.3.

Hewlett bettered the 25:29.7 record set last year by Bill Straub of Army.

Despite its one-two punch, Harvard lost the team title to Navy, which scored 33 points. Greg Williams, who was third, paced the Middies who placed their five men in the top 10. The Cantabs wound up second with 51, followed by Brown with 90, Army 109 and Princeton 140. Penn was sixth with 171 and defending champion Cornell seventh with 186.

Miami Gridders Bombard Tulane, 21 - 0

By GENE PLOWDEN

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Bob Biletnikoff, Miami's sophomore quarterback, passed and ran the Hurricanes to a 21-0 football triumph over Tulane in the Orange Bowl Friday night.

Miami took the opening kickoff and marched 74 yards in 14 plays for the first touchdown, with Biletnikoff completing three passes for 37 yards.

The Hurricanes drove 53 yards for the second score, with Biletnikoff tossing a 23-yard pass to Pete Banaszak, who made a sensational catch as he raced across the goal line.

Three Biletnikoff passes, for 12, 10 and 14 yards brought the Hurricanes another touchdown midway in the fourth period. The rangy southpaw rushed across from the four to end the drive that carried 62 yards in nine plays.

The game counted as a Southeastern Conference appearance for Tulane because Georgia Tech dropped out of the league.

Quarterback Dave East went to the air 14 times in the first half and completed nine but gained only 80 yards as Miami stopped every Tulane thrust. Late in the first half Tulane drove to the Miami eight but four plays later Miami took over on the 20.

It was Miami's second win against four losses and a tie. Tulane has won only one in six.

Richardson Falls In Semi - Finals

BUENOS AIRES (AP) — Nancy Richey of Dallas and top-seeded Maria Bueno of Brazil advanced to the women's singles finals of the Argentine International Tennis championships Friday but veteran Ham Richardson of Dallas lost his bid to gain the men's finals.

Richardson was beaten by Sapin's Manuel Santana 8-6, 6-3, 6-4 in a semifinal match. Miss Richey ousted Norma Baylon of Argentina 6-2, 3-6, 6-4 and Miss Bueno eliminated Francoise Durr of France 6-4, 1-6, 6-2.

Miss Richey and Elizabeth Starkey of Britain won their semifinal women's doubles match, defeating Miss Durr and Nora Somoza of Argentina 6-2, 3-6, 6-3.

Baseball Season Opening Date Set

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) —The 1965 major league baseball season will open Monday, April 12, and close Sunday, Oct. 3.

The announcement was made jointly by the National and American leagues Friday.

Eighteen of the 20 big league clubs will open on Monday. The exceptions are the Chicago White Sox and the Baltimore Orioles who will open in Baltimore, Tuesday, April 13.

This marks the first time in years that neither the Washington Senators nor the Cincinnati Reds will get a day's head start.

In the past, the Senators and Reds were the host teams on Monday with the rest of the openers played the following day.

Had the same format been followed this year, the secondary openers would have fallen on Good Friday, an open date.

In the American League Monday openers, Boston will be at Washington, New York at Minnesota, Detroit at Kansas City and Cleveland at Los Angeles. The games at Kansas City and Los Angeles will be played at night.

The Chicago-Baltimore opener Tuesday is a day game.

All five openers in the National League will be played on Monday. Los Angeles will be at New York, San Francisco at Pittsburgh, St. Louis at Chicago, the Braves at Cincinnati and Philadelphia at Houston. The Houston opener will be at night.

The National League schedule lists the Milwaukee team merely as the Braves.

"That's because we don't know whether the team will be in Milwaukee or Atlanta when the season opens," explained Fred Fleig, National League secretary.

Giants, Jets To Bring In Big Crowds

NEW YORK (AP) — Both the New York Giants and the New York Jets are home Sunday and the total attendance for the two pro football games is expected to hit the 120,000 mark. In terms of cash, that should mean a combined gate of about $600,000.

The Giants are virtually sold out for the season at Yankee Stadium. They will pack in 63,000-plus for the Dallas Cowboys.

The Jets have struck it rich at Shea Stadium. With unbeaten Buffalo as the attraction in an important American Football League game, they may draw close to 60,000. The advance sale already is near the 50,000 mark.

Neither game will be carried on television in the Metropolitan area.

U.S. Team Wins at Horse Show

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States equestrian team ran its record to 5-for-6 in the international events in the National Horse Show Friday by winning the Joseph B. Murray Memorial Challenge Trophy so easily has one rider did not bother to mount.

This was a team competition with the best three scores of the four riders to count. By the time the final United States rider, Frank Chapot of Wallpack, N.J., was scheduled to go, the victory was in the bag. So he sat it out.

Kathy Kusner of Arlington, Va., riding Untouchable, and veteran Bill Steinkraus, of Noroton, Conn., up on Sinjon, both had faultless rides over the 12 jumps. Neal Shapiro of Glen Head, N.Y., riding Jacks Or Better, had 1¼ faults — one knockdown and a quarter time fault for exceeding the 60-second time limit.

Argentina was second with 22½ faults, Canada third with 24, Brazil fourth with 26, and Mexico fifth with 36. Canada might have fared better if 18-year-old Jim Day hadn't been tossed by Mr. Dunahee at one fence.

Cap And Gown, a 7-year-old bay gelding owned by Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Cunningham of Warrenton, Va., captured the William F. Wharton Memorial Challenge Trophy for conformation hunters.

Clay Plans Cut Up at Weigh-In

BOSTON (AP) — Cassius Clay plans to cut up at the weigh-in for his Nov. 16 heavyweight championship bout with Sonny Liston despite the $2,500 bond put up as insurance against any shenanigans.

"I'll still cut up," Clay told newsmen Friday after his workout. "I'll lose $2,500. It will be a great show for $2,500. What's $2 500 when you can make $6 million for each fight?"

Clay referred to Thursday's announcement by the State Boxing Commission that each fighter must put up the $2,500 bond as insurance there wouldn't be a repetition of the trouble Clay caused at the weigh-in for the Miami bout in which he won the title from Liston.

In Miami, Clay raised such a ruckus that one of the attending physicians thought Cassius was too emotionally distraught to be allowed to fight that night.

Jets Release Halfback Bill Pashe

Georgia's Head Grid Coach Likes Both Football, History

By KELSO STURGEON

Associated Press Sports Writer

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — If the librarian at the University of Georgia was shaken when the university's new football coach walked in and asked for a guided tour, what do you think the professors will think when the coach shows up for class?

Vincent Joseph Dooley didn't see anything unusual about his interest in the library, but the speechless librarian, W. Porter Kellam, hadn't been around many football coaches who behaved in this manner.

Kellam was soon to find out, however, that the 32-year-old Dooley is as much a man of letters as he is of the rough and tumble world of college football. Now Dooley says he may return to the classroom to study more about his first love—history.

A visit to this young coach's office reveals that one deep file drawer in his desk is filled with leaflets and data about places of historic interest. His present reading material consists of a book about Georgia and another about Germany in the time of Adolf Hitler.

Dooley was graduated from Auburn in 1954 and then spent two years in the Marine Corps, from which he was discharged as a captain in 1956. He immediately returned to Auburn and earned his master's degree in history. He received the degree in 1963 while a member of the school's football coaching staff.

His master's thesis, on Jeffersonian Democrats in Alabama in the 1930s, was considered of doctoral quality by the men who graded it. It also put Dooley at the point of decision—whether to teach history or coach football.

"I didn't give much thought to teaching until I got my Masters," Dooley confided. "But there I was, at Auburn and an assistant coach and with not much chance of going anywhere as a head coach.

"I tried to look at the thing with a long-range plan—from the money standpoint, the security and all that," he said.

But before Dooley could settle back with his pipe to study and teach history, one of his long-time friends, athletic director Joel Eaves of Georgia, tapped him for Georgia's head coaching job.

Dooley has coached the Bulldogs to a 4-2-1 record thus far this year and is in the thick of the battle for the Southeastern Conference championship. His job hasn't been easy Georgia was picked to finish ninth in the 11 team SEC race.

"Football has taken all my time since coming to Georgia," Dooley said. "But I still manage to read some history every day—even if it's just 30 minutes before I go to sleep at night.

"It's very relaxing to me to be able to think about something besides football—to escape from all of it," he said. "I missed a lot of courses in college that I still want to study and would like to go back to school here as soon as time permits.

"By the way," he added. "This little chat has stimulated my interest in the subject all the more. I wish I had time to go to the library now."

Rangers Recall Jacques Plante

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Rangers recalled veteran goalie Jacques Plante from Baltimore as a possible replacement for Marcel Paille in Saturday's National Hockey League game against the Maple Leafs in Toronto.

Paille suffered a sprained right ankle in Thursday night's game against Detroit and is doubtful starter Saturday. Plante, a six-time Vezina Trophy winner and a Rangers' regular last year, was sent to the American League at the season's start.

Earlier Friday, the Rangers assigned left wing Dave Richardson to Baltimore.

Monday Night TV Proposal Is Grounded

By JOE REICHLER

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The proposed $20 million Monday night television spectacular, with all 20 major league clubs sharing equally in the revenue, has fallen through, at least for the 1965 season, The Associated Press learned Friday.

John Fetzer, president of the Detroit Tigers and head of baseball's television committee, gave these sad tidings to the club owners at the closed-door joint meeting of the American and National Leagues Thursday.

Each league met separately Friday. Another joint session will close the summit conferences Saturday.

"The Monday night TV spectacular is out for the 1965 season," Fetzer reportedly announced. "We're hopeful, however, that we can get a substitute date, perhaps Saturday afternoon."

The original plan was to present two major league games, one in the East and one in the West, on Monday nights on a coast-to-coast basis with no blackout.

Each of the clubs was to realize $1 million in revenue for the season.

NBC and ABC advised Fetzer last Saturday that they could not clear programming time for the Monday night special. CBS, which took over official ownership of the New York Yankees last Monday, already had announced it was not interested.

"It came as a shock to us," a member of the committee confided. "We thought we had the deal all wrapped up with a major network (ABC). That is, until several weeks ago when they informed us they wished to wait until their early fall ratings came in.

"Last week we were told their Monday night ratings had reached new heights, and consequently, they were loath to relinquish this prime viewing time."

The committee is hopeful of salvaging the TV spectacular by substituting Saturday afternoon for Monday night.

Huskers Battle Kansas

By United Press International

Undefeated and fifth - ranked Nebraska will take a 14-game winning streak, longest among the nation's major colleges, to Lawrence Saturday against upset - minded Kansas before a sellout Jayhawker home coming gathering in excess of 45,000.

Twice - beaten Kansas (5-2) matches Nebraska's perfect 4-0 Big Eight slate in the league's headliner. The victor has the inside track to the conference title with a probable Sugar bowl bid in the offering.

Both clubs enter the important battle minus two outstanding linemen — each previous winners of the league's "Lineman - of - the - Week" honor.

Kansas lost Richard Pratt, a husky 264 - pound right guard, with a severe knee injury in a 7-0 squeaker over Kansas State last weekend. Mike Grace, a 217 - pound Sophomore defensive end, will be sidelined with a leg injury suffered in a bruising 9 - 0 victory over Missouri.

Both Pratt and Grace are out for the year. Ron Marsh, a 185-pounder will fill in for Pratt, and veteran Husker Chuck Doepke will be Grace's replacement.

Otherwise, both clubs are expected to be at full strength.

Nebraska, which ranks first in all Big Eight team statistical departments, is among the nation's top clubs both offensively and defensively. Kansas' hopes center around an explosive ground attack led by All-American halfback Gale Sayers.

Not since 1961 have the Kansans emerged victorious in the 70 - game Nebraska series. The Jayhawkers took the '61 clash 28-6 but the Huskers hold a solid margin in the series, 48-19-3.

Nebraska's defense, which ranks No. 1 in the nation totally and second in rushing, gives the Huskers a 7-point favorites' role but coach Bob Devaney said his club "will have to go more than 100 per cent to win."

"We haven't played a team yet as explosive as Kansas. Any of their backs can go all the way, any time," Devaney warned.

Nebraska, bidding for the first back - to - back Big Eight titles since Oklahoma turned the trick in 1955 and '56, has won five of its seven games with ease. Only Minnesota and Missouri battled the Huskers on even terms until Nebraska won with fourth - quarter spurts.

Cougars Challenge Utah

By BOB EGER
Associated Press Sports Writer

Brigham Young's pesky Cougars have progressed from a stepping stone to a formidable hurdle in the path of Utah's bid for the Western Athletic Conference football title.

Two weeks ago the Redskins smiled when they looked at their schedule and saw BYU was the only thing between them and a share of the crown.

Then the Cougars stunned everybody by upsetting powerful Utah State, and doing it in convincing fashion, 28-14.

The Redskin-Cougar clash is the only conference game involving WAC teams Saturday. Non-conference contests match New Mexico vs. Texas Western Arizona State University vs. Kansas State, Arizona vs. Idaho and Wyoming vs. Utah State.

Utah hopes a home field advantage and the league's best defense can offset the versatile Brigham Young attack lead by sophomore quarterback Virgil Carter. Utah's defense has allowed seven opponents just 6.1 points per game.

A Utah victory put the Redskins' conference record at 3-1, the same as that of two-time champion New Mexico.

A third club, Arizona, also is in a position to tie the Lobos for conference honors. The Wildcats need a victory over Arizona State in their Nov. 28 season finale in Tucson.

New Mexico, its conference schedule finished, will be busy with four non-conference opponents while waiting to see if it will be undisputed champ for the third straight year.

The Lobos are heavily favored over Texas Western, which has three losses and a tie against WAC teams this year.

Braves Rest Case in Court

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The Milwaukee Braves rested their case Friday in their plea for federal jurisdiction over the legal battle to prevent their move to Atlanta.

John McHale, Braves president and general manager, was the only witness called by the club at the hearing which began Thursday before U.S. District Judge Robert E. Tehan.

Milwaukee County, which has a contract under which the Braves agreed to play all of their 1965 home games in County Stadium, has obtained a state court restraining order to block the Braves' move. The club has petitioned federal court to take jurisdiction.

McHale, who was on the witness stand for 5½ hours Thursday, completed his testimony Friday with a denial, under cross examination, that the Braves had refused to sell to a Milwaukee syndicate interested in keeping the team here.

County Corporation Counsel Robert P. Russell asked McHale if the Braves had turned down such an offer within the last month.

"As I understand an offer, I'd say no," McHale replied. "I would say that we received an offer to negotiate."

McHale said only four per cent of the club's stock is owned by Wisconsin residents.

The first witness called by the county was Ralph H. Delforge, club secretary and assistant treasurer. Delforge estimated Braves' total revenue for fiscal 1964 at $3,615,840.

William R. Anderson, stadium manager, said the club played to a road attendance of 1,212,087 this year, giving the team an estimated income of $333,323 from the visiting team's share.

John W. Mullen, Braves farm director, testified his office still is maintained at the stadium.

Bauer Says He's Happy Over Award

KANSAS CITY (AP) — It was a happy Hank Bauer of the Baltimore Orioles as he got the word Friday of his choice as the American League Manager of the Year.

"It's the greatest thing that has happened to me," said the 42-year-old Bauer, who in this third year of managing piloted the Orioles to the brink of the league title.

"A manager is just as good as his players and every single Oriole deserves a great deal of credit for our fine showing."

Bauer's team finished third in a torrid finish, behind the New York Yankees and Chicago White Sox.

He received 53 of the votes from 83 sports writers in the annual Associated Press poll. Al Lopez of the Chicago White Sox was second with 19.

Commenting on the runner-up, Bauer said:

"I want to say one thing. Al Lopez did a tremendous job with the White Sox."

The Baltimore manager cited by name several Oriole players. He said third baseman Brooks Robinson "had a great year and rightfully deserves the American League's Most Valuable Player award."

Among others were Luis Aparicio, who "played brilliantly at short," Jerry Adair, who "handled himself well at second, making only five errors", and Sam Bowens, rookie outfielder, for his "defensive and offensive output."

Bauer said if he had to pick "the most pleasant surprises among the pitchers it would have to be Wally Bunker, who won 19 games for us as a rookie."

"I don't know where he accumulated all of his pitching knowledge," Bauer added, "but he certainly had it and it helped our staff.

"Harvey Haddix, one of our relievers, helped him a lot and Wally always inquired about different hitters in the league until he had them well catalogued. Stu Miller and Dick Hall gave my bullpen a great deal of strength."

And about the future?

Bauer said, "We want to strengthen our outfield, preferably in center field.

"I talked to Lee MacPhail, our general manager, and every effort will be made to get a center fielder."

Since the season ended Bauer has been looking after his beer distributing business and taken several trips in Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska, hunting ducks, geese and quail. He soon plans a visit with his 89-year-old father, John Bauer, at Belleville, Ill.

Bauer was reminded that during spring training he had picked the Orioles to finish third. Asked if he'd venture a good guess now as where his club will end up in 1965 Bauer replied:

"Ask me in spring training."

Ken Boyer Selected Player of Year

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The Sporting News has named Ken Boyer, third baseman for the World Series champion St. Louis Cardinals, as its Player of the Year.

Boyer is the first Cardinal so honored by the baseball newspaper since Stan Musial in 1951.

The St. Louis star, who led the major leagues in runs batted in with 119, won a Series game against the New York Yankees with a grand-slam home run.

Penn Gridder Dies

So far this year 23 football fatalities have been reported.

It was the second Penn player in the university's history to die in a football accident. In 1922, Andrew Lang suffered a broken neck in a game with Mercersburg Academy.

Buder, who would have been 19 next Monday, was from Springfield, Mass., where he had played football for Classical High School. He was a student in the Wharton School of Business.

Dr. Paul Schrode, Penn's medical director, said Buder's death resulted when a multiple fat emboli—bubbles—from damaged tissue in the broken leg entered the blood and then reached the lungs and heart.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Buder, were at his bedside in University Hospital when he succumbed shortly after dawn.

SEC Crown, Bowl Bid Riding LSU-Alabama Tilt

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Unbeaten and nationally ranked football powers Alabama and Louisiana State will rely on their nerveless and battletested substitute quarterbacks in Saturday's crucial Southeastern Conference game.

Stakes couldn't be much higher for an SEC football clash — the conference title, a possible bowl bid, national ranking, and undefeated records.

The game also will feature a strategy battle between third-ranked Alabama's Coach Paul Bryant and two men who played and began their coaching careers under him, LSU Coach Charlie McClendon and assistant Pat James.

Alabama's awesome offensive machine will ride on quarterback Steve Sloan, a passing and running wizard who has repeatedly filled in for injured signal caller Joe Namath.

Sloan's rival for eight-ranked LSU will be quarterback Billy Ezell, replacing Pat Screen who, like Namath, is nursing an injured knee. Ezell showed his mettle in last weekend's 11-10 victory over Mississippi

Defensively, both teams are powerhouses. The Crimson Tide has yielded five touchdowns in seven games, LSU only three in six outings.

Two of the nation's top kicking specialists may play a major role in the outcome. Alabama's David Ray leads the nation in scoring by kicking with 53 points, while LSU's Doug Moreau has made 29 points. Both also are threats at end.

"Both offense and defense will have to go a great job this week for us to stay with Alabama," said McClendon. "They are aggressive and as usual they are very well coached."

Bryant, not noted for secret practice sessions, this week bolted the gates for the first time this season, hinting he has to devise something new for his two ex-pupils.

"He and Pat are so fired up, I'm glad that coaches don't play. We wouldn't have a chance Saturday," Bryant said of McClendon and James.

Unbeaten Irish Aims at Pitt

By ED SCHUYLER R.

PITTSBURGH (AP) —Top-ranked Notre Dame brings its missile-like offense and stonewall defense to the lair of Pitt's slightly bedraggled Panthers Saturday in search of a seventh straight victory.

A sellout crowd of some 57,000 —the first at Pitt Stadium since the Oklahoma game of 1957—is expected to watch the Panthers (2-3)2) try to halt the unbeaten Fighting Irish.

Notre Dame mentor Ara Parseghian made his debut as a coach in the East last Saturday when the Irish blasted Navy 40-0 at Philadelphia. His squad is a strong favorite to win again.

The Notre Dame missile launcher is quarterback John Huarte, who played only 46 minutes last year when the Irish were 2-7.

Huarte has completed 72 passes in 128 attempts this season for 1,273 yards and 12 touchdowns. The Notre Dame season records of 1,374 yards gained passing and 16 TDs were set in 1949 by Bob Williams.

Huarte' principal target is end Jack Snow, who has caught 41 passes for seven touchdowns, tying the school's season records. He has gained 741 yards on his receptions to break another.

The Irish also can move on the ground. Their leading rusher is halfback Bill Wolski, who's picked up 468 yards and six touchdowns on 94 carries. He also has caught two scoring passes.

The Notre Dame defense has allowed 867 yards through the air but only 183 on the ground—and Pitt is mainly a running team.

If the Panthers are to pull an upset they will need a top game from quarterback Fred Mazurek, their third-ranked career total offense leader.

The senior signal caller has had a rough time in Pitt's last four games. Still for the season he has run for 433 yards and four touchdowns and passed for 531 and two TDs.

Pitt has won five of the last eight meetings with Notre Dame, including last year's game, 27-7, but the Irish lead the series with 18 victories. There has been one tie.

Ohio State Entertains Penn State

By FRITZ HOWELL
Associated Press Sports Writer

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Ohio State Coach Woody Hayes isn't talking about the Rose Bowl these days — but his boss is.

Like most football mentors, Woody concentrates on the upcoming foe. He has three — Penn State, Northwestern and Michigan — to dispose of before hoping the unbeaten season sends him and his Buckeyes to Pasadena.

But University President Novice Fawcett, lauding the team's six-game winning streak at a Touchdown Club meeting, brought up the possibility of "one good, long, interesting trip for the squad." Since the Bucks have no more road trips scheduled, he must have meant the Rose Bowl jaunt.

Not only Northwestern and Michigan stand in Ohio State's path to Pasadena. The big obstacle is Purdue, currently tied with the Buckeyes atop the big ten at 4-0. The Boilermakers play seven conference contests, Ohio State six, and if both go all the way the Lafayette corps would get the bid since they've never appeared in the Coast contest.

Ohio's big hope is that Michigan State, Minnesota or Indiana can derail Purdue while the Bucks continue down the unbeaten trail.

The Ohioans, with a flock of walking wounded due to last week's invasion of Iowa, take time off from conference chores Saturday to entertain Penn State. The nittany Lions hold a 3-0 edge over the Buckeyes, and two of the decisions were at Hayes' expense. Ohio State is favored in this one.

But Hayes said recently "We're not sure it's a good thing to have a nonconference game in midseason. They have everything to gain and nothing to lose against us."

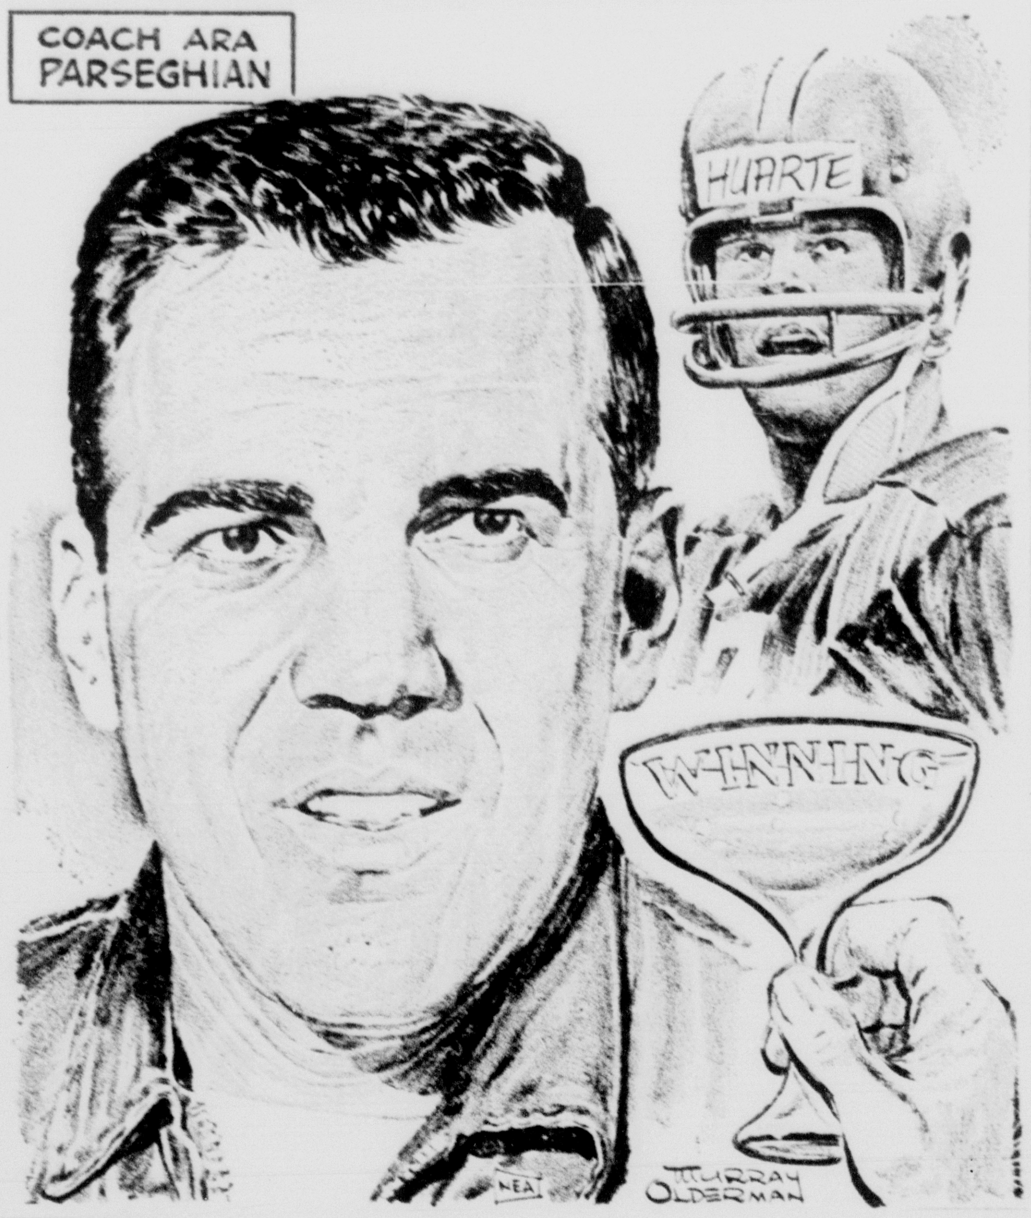
THE SPIRITS OF NOTRE DAME



Bills, Colts Seek to Keep Win Streaks Alive, Sunday

By JACK HAND
Associated Press Sports Writer

The Buffalo Bills and Baltimore Colts, the two hottest clubs in professional football, will try to stretch their winning streaks Sunday in games at New York and Chicago.

Seven National Football League games and three American Football League games are on the Sunday program for the ninth week of the season.

The Bills, only unbeaten team in big league pro football, shoot for their ninth straight against the improving New York Jets. Other AFL games have San Diego, the Western Division leader, at Denver and Oakland at Kansas City.

Baltimore, 52-0 winner over the Bears earlier, aims for its eighth straight victory following an opening day defeat by Minnesota in the rematch at Wrigley Field.

Cleveland, leading the NFL's Eastern Conference by two full games, takes on Washington at Cleveland. The second-place St. Louis Cardinals hope to break out of a two-game losing slump against the always dangerous Pittsburgh Steelers at St. Louis.

Detroit, trailing Baltimore by 1½ games in the Western Conference, tangles with the Packers at Green Bay in an important game for both cubs. With the Colts threatening to run away and hide, a defeat for either the Lions or Packers would be a title crusher.

Philadelphia and Los Angeles, both still dreaming of a title from their third-place spots, meet at Los Angeles in a game that virtually will eliminate the loser from the race.

Dallas moved into Yankee Stadium with a two-game winning streak to face the New York Giants, who showed a flash of their 1963 form in beating the Cardinals last week. San Francisco, tied with the Bears for last in the West, will be at Minnesota to face the Vikings, who were stung by Green Bay last week, 42-13.

Five of the NFL games are rematches of earlier action. In their previous meetings, in addition to the Colts slaughter of the Bears, the Browns downed the Redskins 27-13, the Packers shaded the Lions 14-10, the Giants and Cowboys tied 13-13 and the Vikings beat the 49ers 27-22 despite Jim Marshall's wrong-way run for a safety. It is the first meeting of the Cards and Steelers and the Eagles and Rams.

All AFL games are rematches. The first time around Buffalo's Bills rallied to top the Jets 34-24, Kansas City defeated Oakland 21-9 and San Diego bombed Denver 42-14.

Most of the teams have been crippled by injuries. The Bears are without linebackers Bill George and Mike Reilly but the Colts are healthy except for Butch Wilson, a reserve tight end. Jim Brown will be playing for Cleveland with a sore toe and defensive tackle Frank Parker is doubtful. The Redskins are 100 per cent fit.

Sonny Randle, of course, is lost to the Cards for the season and running back Joe Childress is doubtful. The Steelers aren't sure if linebacker Bob Schmitz and tight end Jim Kelly will be ready.

In the lion-Packer game, J. D. Smith, Detroit offensive tackle is still doubtful but Green Bay has everybody back, including guard Fuzzy Thurston, who missed last week.

The Rams will be without guard Roger Davis and the Eagles have, end Ralph Smith and linebacker Dave Lloyd on the sidelines and fullback Earl Gros a question mark because of a strained knee.

Miami Skipper Wins Race

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — Jack Manson, a 54-year-old Miami skipper with a weak heart and a bleeding ulcer, drove his thundering diesel Kamikaze to his second straight victory Friday in the 158-mile powerboat race from Miami to Key West.

Manson, pushing his 36-foot craft through six-foot seas, was timed in 3 hours and 19 minutes as he went across the finish line 17 minutes in front of Jim Wynne, red-bearded marine engineer from Miami, in Donzi Dopzy. Jim Brevil Jr., also of Miami, was third.

Manson, who named his boat, Kamikaze "because ocean racing is a form of suicide," lost 10 minutes when a crewman, Jack Seville, was injured.

Seville's seat belt broke and he was hurled against a bulkhead. Severely bruised, he was taken off by a Coast Guard helicopter and lifted to a hospital.

After two heart attacks, Manson keeps racing "because it's good for me. My doctor says it's all that keep me alive." He was in a hospital six weeks ago for ulcer treatment.

'Queen Empress' Rated Favorite in Gardenia

By ORLO ROBERTSON

It'll be ladies day on the American turf Saturday.

Thirteen 2-year-old fillies appear in the $188,090 Gardenia at Garden State Park. Fourteen older members of the distaff division tangle in the 94th running of the Ladies Handicap at Aqueduct and 14 more are slated for the Falls City Handicap at Churchill Downs.

The Gardenia, at 1 1-16 miles, matches the top juvenile fillies of the land with the entry of the Wheatley Stable's Queen Empress and Discipline the choice to pick up the winner's share of $112,858. Queen Empress is the leading candidate for the 2-year-old filly title but a defeat, especially by Marshua, could put a crimp in her chances.

Queen Empress, who'll be ridden by Willie Shoemaker, and Marshua, with Wayne Chambers in the saddle, have met seven times. The Queen came out on top on five occasions but in their last clash Marshua scored by a narrow margin in the Selima at Laurel.

The field also includes such highly rated fillies as Up Oars and Lay Aft from the Cain Hoy Stable and Mr. B's Sister.

Miss Cavandish, with victories in the American Coaching Club, Monmouth and Delaware Oaks and the Alabama to back up her claim to the 3-year-old filly title, is the 5-2 choice to take the 1½-mile Ladies Handicap. First money is $39,065.

Harry S. Nichol's speedy filly picks up top weight of 121 pounds under Howard Grant and gives as much as 16 to her rivals.

Old Hat, winner of the Delaware Handicap and bidding for the older filly and mare title, takes on the heavy burden of 123 pounds as the choice in the mile Falls City Handicap.

Top events at other major tracks are the Mason-Dixon Handicap for 3-year-olds at Laurel, the Jack R. Johnston Memorial Handicap at Sportsman's Park and the Redwood City Handicap at Bay Meadows.

Mother, Three Children Found Dead in Garage

CLIFTON, N.J. (AP) — A mother and her three pajama-clad children were found dead in their garage today in a car with a hose running from the exhaust pipe into the interior.

The dead were Lucia Simerlein, 41, who was dressed in street clothes, and her children, Paul 11; Carl, 4, and Joan, 23 months.

Police Chief Joseph Nee called the deaths an apparent suicide and triple homicide and said there was no sign of a struggle inside the car. No note was found, Nee said.

The bodies were discovered by the husband, Charles, 38, who had come home at 12:21 a.m. after a business appointment.

. Nee said there had been some strain in the famliy because Simerlein had been unemployed for several months. Simerlein started a new job Monday with the Volvo Corp. in Englewood Cliffs, Nee said.

Soybean losses ranged up to nearly 2 cents a bushel on selling attributed to disappointment over a private forecast that placed this year's crop at 679 million bushels. This is a million bushels higher than the same source estimated a month ago. The trade had expected a lower figure.

The October 1 government forecast was for a crop of 698 million bushels.

Wheat was down more than a cent a bushel on the nearby deliveries on selling by commission houses. Commercial interests bought on the scale-down.

Corn advanced early in the trade but prices receded near the close as demand slackened. Exporters were the most active buyers earlier and hedge selling was reported light. Export sales of corn today totaled about a million bushels.

Rye and oats also declined in light trading.

Estimated carlot receipts were wheat 3, corn 319, barley 13, soybeans 16, and oats and rye none.

PLEA CHANGED

DENVER (UPI)— Dr. L. D. Quick, 43, pleaded guilty Thursday to a misdemeanor charge of assault and battery and was given a Dec. 14 hearing date on his request for probation. Prosecuting attorneys said the physician previously had been charged with performing an abortion, but it was amended after a 22-year-old unmarried woman, who said the doctor had performed the abortion last December, said she could not testify as to what happened.

Ramah News

By MRS. HAROLD CLIFFORD

The basement of the Simla Baptist Church really got a face lifting last week. The walls, ceiling, floor, particians, benches and chairs all got a coat of paint. It really looks swell. Yes, the windows got new curtains.

My! These lovely fall days. We really enjoy them. It sprinkled a little here in town Monday night.

Kline Bowker, of Goodland, Kan., was assigned the Simla section and will no doubt live in Simla, where the section headquarters will be. Mr. Bowker is taking the place of Harold Clifford, who recently retired.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Pearson, Linda, David, Nadine and Roger and Mrs. Kate Stanko visited Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Pearson.

Next Sunday, Nov. 8, Cloyd Stewart and two Amugo Indians from Mexico will be at the Simla Baptist Church. Mr. Stewart is a brother of Mrs. Emmabelle Hartwell and is a Wycliffe translator.

Sunday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Snell and children, Randy, Linda, Patty, Sharon and Joe, of Falcon were Miss Mary Tamlin of Simla, Mrs. Henry Snell and Tim and Chucky Hensley. On the way home they stopped at Ellicott and visited the Charles Hensley family. Chucky remained at home after a visit with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Snell.

Mrs. Jean Carpenter visited Friday with her mother, Mrs. Helena Bodhaine.

The Simla Cubs played football with the Deaf and Blind School last Friday and were victors by a score of 32-19. This was the last game of the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Bayard Seadden of Boulder, were out Sunday to visit Mrs. Helena Bodhaine.

Ramah was well represented at the funeral Monday of Mrs. Hattie Barhill, who was a longtime resident of Ramah.

Mrs. Edmondson, of Colorado Springs, spent a few days this week with her friend, Mrs. Bessie Snell.

Halloween night was a gay time around town. The spooks, goblins and what have you were about for treats or tricks. We older ones enjoy it as much as the children.

Mr. and Mrs. George Isgar and Georgia were Tuesday evening dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Leach and boys, the occasion being Georgia's birthday.

On Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Pete McKay were in Morrison to visit Mrs. McKay's parents.

Mrs. Pete McKay called on Mrs. Lillian Nichols one day last week.

Saturday evening guests of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Starey and Leonard were Mr. and Mrs. Donald Dyke of Security and Mr. and Mrs. Richard Van Dyke of Colorado Springs.

Gideon Carner is now working in Denver.

Mrs. Grace Smith and Hank Whyte spent the weekend in Colorado Springs, where they visited their doctor and relatives.

Contrary to last week's item, the American Legion and the American Legion Auxiliary supper will be held in the Ramah School Auditorium, instead of the Ramah Cafe, on November 10, at 6 p.m. More elbow room.

Sunday afternoon callers on Mr. and Mrs. Fred Isgar were Mr. and Mrs. Harold Jordon.

Mr. and Mrs. Orville Shelton called on Mr. and Mrs. Dean Cox Sunday afternoon.

Mental Hospitals Speed Up Rate of Discharges

EDITOR'S NOTE — They don't call it the lunatic asylum any more, and almost everything else there has been changed. Susan Washington was committed 63 years ago and is still there, but more than half the patients admitted these days are out within six months.

By HUELL WARREN JR.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., (AP) — Susan Washington was 22 the spring her second baby came. She had lost a child. She had come to loathe the northwest Missouri farmer she married four years earlier. A sister died. Her father was a drunk. It seemed to Susan Washington that all her friends were mean to her.

So it was three weeks after the second baby that Susan Washington's name was enrolle in careful black script at the top of a page in a record book which is two feet tall and bears the title: "Missouri State Lunatic Asylum in St. Joseph."

The diagnosis was chronic mania.

That was the spring of 1901, and almost everything has changed.

The indelible and precise script in the big record book gave way to intermittent scrawls; and, after three pages of Susan Washington, the book itself gave way to typewritten notes in an individual folder. Chronic mania disappeared as a medical term, to be succeeded by dementia praecox and schizophrenia. Even the name of the place changed from lunatic asylum to State Hospital No. 2.

But in the record of Susan Washington there is a recurrent notation: No change. No change. No change! Its persistence in the early years doomed her, apparently as long ago as 1905; and now at 85 she has been a patient at the hospital 63 years.

Suppose Susan Washington was 22 again and came to St. Joseph today.

Matching the old diagnosis against current experience as best they can, the specialists at the hospital are confident she would have a 50-50 chance for release in six months, a two-thirds chance for release within a year.

Dr. Manson B. Pettit, superintendent of the hospital, says three main changes have brightened the prospect:

—Growing numbers of patients and their families have come to accept mental illness as a disease and not a disgrace. They realize it may be cured. They seek help earlier.

—Intense concentration on those newly arrived at the hospita.

—And, in the past dozen years, new drugs. Dr. Pettit leans to the belief that the basic solution to mental illness ultimately will come through chemistry.

In the days when Susan Washington came to the hospital, the legal commitment papers accompanying many of the patients said "for life."

When a patient arrives now, doctors, social workers and thei aides start building up the idea that the patient may be restored. They start coaching him and his family for re-entry into normal life. As the time approaches, the preparations are stepped up.

The product of this concentration is reflected in the hospital's chart for a year. Of 748 patients admitted, 419 were released within six months. Of the released, only 34 were back within the next six months.

The intense work with the newly arrived is designed to prevent what happened to Susan Washington between 1901 and 1905.

She was a physical as well as a mental wreck when she entered. Her body responded, but her mind could not shake its extreme depression.

In 1903, Susan was described as destructive and hard to care for, and she had lapsed into the invariable refuge of the broken-minded in her setting. Susan was profane and vulgar.

In 1904, Susan was a little quieter mentall. She did a little work around her ward. She was paroled to her father.

Susan was back in 3 months, in fairly good physical condition but "somewhat depressed." There was another note on her readmission, and it just about closed the book on what the rest of her life was to be: "She says she is glad to be back."

Susan had adjusted — to the institution. She had found comfort in a world without problems and no necessity for decisions.

In present times, the hospital might try a half dozen times or so to restore Susan to her family or get her into a boarding home if it was the family situation that rankled.

Here are some of the notations in the world record book from 1905 to 1911: Little or no interest in her surroundings. Mind is enfeebled. Mind is gone. Quiet and causes little trouble. Seldom manifests interest in anything.

This utter withdrawal, more than violence or misbehavior, is the challenge which confronts the staff of a state hospital.

In the old style, a beauty operator often became standard adjunct of the women's wards. She cut and curled and manicured on the theory a presentable appearance might help a patient re-establish contact with her former world and her self-respect.

The new style is to see that a comb is lying handy and wheedle the patient into using it of her own volition.

Restorations for some mental patients are built from such toeholds. The task is to set scenes for them.

The scene for remotivation is a primitive version of Madison Avenue's "brain-storming," or the PTA's "buzz session." An attendant or psychiatric aide picks 10 or 12 of the most likely among her regular patients and gathers them weekly in an alcove of their ward. She talks and tries to get them to talk — about anything outside the confines into which they have withdrawn.

After a personal word for each, the leader frequently uses a poem or song to gain attention and provide something to talk about. She has brought along props — a toy tractor, a toy sewing machine or refrigerator, pictures cut from a magazine, a pet. She nearly always turns the conversation toward jobs and work.

It is exciting when a woman who hasn't talked for years bursts forth with the recipe and procedure for baking an angel food cake.

Remotivation is being used with schizophrenics who have been patients a decade or longer, bringing hope for those who in another time probably would have been written off as Susan Washington was before 1911.

Susan is far from unique. Most state mental institutions have her counterparts. St. Joseph has six others who have been patients more than 55 years. A girl admitted at 16 is now 76. Two men now 77 were admitted in their 'teens. A woman of 79 has been on the roll 59 years.

Counting Susan as an average patient and filling in some gaps with estimates, a calculation shows it has cost the taxpayers of Missouri around $27,500 to board, room and care for her for 63 years.

The earliest annual cost figure readily available is $159.90 a patient in 1909. In 1963 it was $1,662 — $4.50 a day. It doubled in the 10 years from 1946 to 1956 and again in the next seven years.

Besides the increased cost of everything, the doubling reflects a use of more people and more highly skilled people in the effort for quick restorations. The cost of drugs is also a factor, but 68 per cent of the budget still is for personal services to patients.

From 1950 to 1963, while the number of resident patients declined from 2,294 to 2,110, the number of employes increased from 471 to 739.

But yearly admissions grew in the same span from 234 to 848. The staff met this challenge, in 1963 for example, by effecting 528 discharges and adding 249 patients to the roll of those who live outside the hospital but come in for periodic treatments and checkups.

Probably by 1905, certainly by 1911, she had become rooted in complete withdrawal. The only place for her was a mental institution. Her physical health fluctuated — poor, failing, better, good. As it came to be measured against her advancing age, it was surprisingly good.

For 23 years Susan's life has coursed from bed to rocking chair to dining table and back to chair and bed in a ward among a hundred women and girls, some too gay and others as withdrawn as herself.

Two nurses and four of five psychiatric aides and attendants are on duty in Susan's ward and an identical one above with another hundred or so women. A doctor devotes most of his time to this building.

In Susan's ward, the active and the attention seekers seem to gravitate to the chairs in the front rows, the quiet to the rear.

Back here sits Susan. She once seemed a tall, spare woman. Now she stoops to 5-3½ and weighs 119. Blood pressure-fine. No teeth. Eyes and ears — good. Flesh — firm. There still is a hint her white hair once was pretty. Her left ankle and foot are slightly deformed. Susan sits in her chair with her left foot tucked under her.

At request, with a little guidance and a change of dresses, Susan walks smartly to the front anteroom to see the first visitor who has come especially to see her since 1959.

If this makes any impression upon her it is not apparent. One of the nurses has worked with Susan eight years and has never heard her say a coherent word.

At a question, Susan works her mouth and seems almost to be forming a one-word reply. But all that comes is a barely audible p-f-f-f-t.

Allen E. Uhles Receives Honor

Allen E. Uhles, instructor of instrumental music at the Colorado School for the Deaf and the Blind, has been cited for his outstanding contribution to the education of handicapped children.

The award is given by the Colorado Federation for the Council of Exceptional Children. The presentation was made by Tom Hockman, director of special education for the Colorado Springs School System. This is the first time the award has gone to a classroom teacher.

Mr. Uhles has had a varied career as a musician. He started as a symphony orchestra musician at the age of 17. He has been a radio and theater performer and program director, and for seven years conducted an orchestra in China.

He has been the instrumental teacher and orchestra conductor at the Colorado School for the Deaf and the Blind for the past nine years. His knowledge and talent with a wide variety of instruments has enabled him to meet the physical, emotional, and intellectual needs of the individual blind child.

Two years ago, a trio of his pupils from the high school was chosen by the international president of the Lions International to represent this state at the convention at Nice, France. There they demonstrated what can be accomplished by the blind and what is being done for them in the United States.

Reporter Puzzled By Packing for Space Journey

By WARD CANNEL

NEW YORK (NEA) — It is a great relief to be over the election campaign.

We were getting quite impatient to start worrying about the news that a civilization may exist in a neighboring galaxy. But you simply do not have the energy to investigate anything while you are trying to keep an open mind.

Anyway, it is futile to begin a quest into the unknown when you are up to your ears in the commonplace, and must decide by Election Day whether haste makes waste or a stitch in time saves nine.

We were, therefore, glad to have made our choice and been done with it. The possibility that Russian astonomers had located another civilization in the universe was, the more we thought about it, overwhelmingly dismal.

Not that we begrudged the Russians their discovery if it proved to be true. What bothered us was the evidence—reception of civilized - sounding radio signals from a couple of pinpoints 3,000 million-million miles out in the universe.

If further radio reception confirmed the Russian report, we were quite certain that preparations for making the journey would begin at once.

(Do not laugh and slap your thigh. We are describing a basic instinct in human nature. Primitive people used to brave thousands of miles long before the space age in order to see for themselves the personalities they had heard on the radio.)

And after talking with a space capsule designer the other day, we have no doubt that the trip can be made once a few mechanical details are worked out. Three - thousand million - million miles may sound like a lot, but if you travel at the speed of light, you can cover the distance in well under 600 years.

The part we found overwhelmingly dismal was the packing for the trip.

We have done a lot of traveling in our time and invariably take too much. But even if you are very careful and economical in what you take, 600 years is a long flight. Why, the sandwich bags alone would probably take up all the closet space.

And what about the bottle tops and apple cores? Yes, and what about the people? It seemd to us that even a space scientist would clutter up the place after he got to be a couple of hundred years old.

So, the other afternoon we we went down and conferred with a bunch of life-sciences laboratory men who are working on this problem. And we can report that there is hardly anything unknown about it.

Unfortunately, we cannot tell for sure what we saw there as we still do not believe it. Nor did we eat or drink any of it (nor anything else in the two days since) although we are certain it was both nutritious and pleasant.

But that is beside the point. What really matters, we learned, is that nothing is ever lost in a close life system such as a space vehicle. It only changes its molecular structure.

Rearrange the molecules and you're back where you started. All you need for the job is energy, and there's plenty of solar energy in space. Nothing could be more commonplace.

Looking At Hollywood

By HEDDA HOPPER

© 1964: By the Chicago Tribune

HOLLYWOOD. — Vince Edwards, who was something of an athlete before he became an actor, has always wanted to make a picture about them. He's closing a deal for movie rights to the story of the American Olympic champ, Hal Connolly, and Connolly's wife, Olga, which he hopes to put on the screen after this year's run of Ben Casey. Connolly, a hammer throw champ, met a Czechoslovakian girl who was competing in the 1956 games, fell in love, and put in a year fighting iron curtain red tape to get her into this country. . . . Rod Steiger was in New York ready to start rehearsals for "The Flowering Peach" when he got an assignment he couldnot resist — a film about the life of the late Pope John. Titled "His Name Was John," it's a semi-documentary feature to be shot in Bergamo, Italy. Rod is the only professional actor in it. He'll play half a dozen roles, acting as a devil's advocate character who ties all the episodes together.

Abbe Lane leased a home in Beverly Hills for six months to be near Perry Leff, and expects to marry him as soon as she's free from Xavier Cugat . . . . . Tony Bill plays Celeste Holm's son in a Mr. Novak segment titled "An Elephant Is Like a Tree" — a teen-age boy blinded by a homemade rocket experiment he gets into with some overly ambitious kids. . . . . Roz Russell says she doesn't care if she never goes back to work. I'm sure she was kidding. She returns to New York when Freddie Brisson's play, "Alfie," opens. . . . Efrem Zimbalist will be Doris Day's handsome skipper in "The Glass Bottom Boat" for M-G-M, but they won't get at it until January. I asked about his parents' beautiful home in Connecticut. "I haven't seen it in years, but my son spends week-ends there," he said.

Don Ameche and Taina Elg open in Cole Porter's "Silk Stockings" at Melodyland theater next week.

The explosion of ammonium nitrate ships in Texas City, Texas, April 16 and 17, 1947, caused 570 deaths. This was the highest loss of life from an explosion in the nation's history.

You'll climb the pyramids with teen-age Viking sailors, and you'll race in the Grand Prix on the mountainous roads of Monte Carlo . . . 200 miles of torturous, twisting skidding and speeding victory. You'll hear the music of the Janissary band in Turkey, and the religious music of the Lenten processions in Spain during Holy Week.

Burl Ives is host and narrator of "Mediterranean Holiday,"

Ives sings sea chanties and serves as your guide on the thrilling voyage to the world's three-masted clipper ship "The most colorful countries on the Flying Clipper."

Martian Type Crusoe Opens At Aircadia

Illusion is sometimes more difficult to simulate than reality. As yet, no astronaut has landed on Mars to factually confirm what information has thus far been ascertained regarding the atmospheric conditions and the terrain of that planet.

Still, enough is known about its environment for producer Aubrey Schenck and director Byron Haskin to make an authentic science fact' film on what to expect when the first interplanetary expedition makes a landing on the planet. With the aid of such outstanding experts as Ib. J. Melchior, former science editor of Life Magazine, and Wernher Von Braun, great care has been taken to make Paramount's Robinson Crusoe on Mars," which opens today at the Aircadia Theatre, as scientifically as accurate as possible.

For one thing, thirty tons of ice and snow were used on the set at Paramount to create the effect of the polar ice caps of Mars for a scene with stars Paul Mantee and Vic Lundin. Although the sound stage is normally warm enough to require the use of large fans, director Haskin and the production crew had to bundle up in heavy overcoats and galoshes to shoot the scene on the frozen expanse.

At the completion of shooting, director Haskin with a chill in his voice and a vapor condensation trail coming from his mouth, said,: Okay. Print it. That winds up the polar cap sequence."

Producer Schenck, his teeth chattering like castanets, nodded agreement, as well as relief and said: "I'm glad that lief and said: "I'm glad that we got this on ice!"

In a few hours, the 'ice cap' had melted away to a vast pool of water, and once again, the blowers were turned on to cool off the sound stage to the prevalent temperature of sunny California!

Starlite Has Late Show

A late, late show has been booked in addition to the regular program for tonight's showing only, at the Starlite Drive - in Theatre. Four big features are on the program for the stay out late show-goers.

First an all - thrill hit, "Nine Miles to Noon" heads the bill; next, "Artists Studio Secrets" will bring blushes and laughs for those who thing young. The third big hit, "Beast of The Haunted Cave" is a horror picture. The last picture on the program "The Female Fiend" is another screamy that will keep patrons wide awake to the very end.

Walt Enjoys Kiddie Mail

Everyone enjoys receiving letters, not excluding Walt Disney — especially when they're from children. A bunch of exultant second-graders, evidently with the approval of a thoughtful teacher, sent a swarm of letters Walt's way from Elmont, New York, recently, some of them full of nothing but praise and some with a request or two added.

"I love to watch your shows," wrote Cathy Parks. "I like shows about horses. I like them because I was living with them last year. May I please have a picture of a horse? I want a black horse. But if you don't have one, I will take any color. But if you don't have a horse I'll take Goofy. Thank you."

In a quite long billet-doux from Maria Gonzalez, the young lady asked for Walt's "ortograf" and allowed as how, when she showed it to her friends, they would probably "send a letter to you just like I did."

And a die-hard, name of Gregory Catalano, wanted Davy Crockett's autograph because "he is smart and aims good."

"You are a good man," wrote Eugene Contino magnanimously to Walt. "I wish you could send me a picture of Pinocchio."

"Sword in the Stone," Pinocchio," the TV show "World of Color," the Mickey Mouse Club" and the World's Fair all came in for their share of attention. Typical was a rush of words from a little Susan, who found reason to omit her last name:

"I want a picture of Pinocchio. He is a friendly puppet. One day I saw "Pinocchio" in the movies. When I got to the World's Fair I will go on the Pepsi Cola ride first. Pinocchio is a cute puppet. I watch the Mickey Mouse Club every night. You make wonderful things. I like you very much.

When we went to the movies we saw "The Sword in the Stone." "The Sword in the Stone" was a very good show. I like the way that Pinocchio talks.

Thank you."

Soldiers Hobby Results In 'Lucious Desserts'

A little extra in preparing food in the mess hall at Ft. Carson's Leadership School makes Spec. 4 Joseph Rail popular. When he has a few spare moments during the day, this 24-year-old cook from Tunkhannock, Pa., slips into his kitchen and bakes luscious pastries for dessert.

Col. A. H. Smith Jr., chief of staff, tasted a sample of Rail's pastries recently and declared them without question the best he had ever eaten in the Army.

"And what's more," added commandant, "Joe is a good soldier, too, always ready for field exercises and more than willing to do his share of all the work."

The cream puffs, eclairs and doughnut specialties which Rail makes are nothing special, he insists. He makes them just "because the guys might like something different for dessert."

He learned about baking while working in a bakery back home and in a doughnut shop in Richmond, Va., in between his high school and Army years. Although the long, confining hours were irksome, he enjoyed the challenge of meeting production schedules and creating new varieties of doughnuts.

"It takes two hours from start to finish," explains Rail. "There are only two basic doughs for the varieties. It's how you ice them or how you roll them that makes the difference. The real trick is to watch your flow of production and your order, so that you always have enough materials on hand to keep the showcase full—but not too full."

Waste of food troubles this son of Lithuanian immigrants. He feels the men should know better than to take more than they can eat.

He finds the higher ranks of men much more conscious of what they eat, declining the sweets and fattening foods.

He has no intentions of doing the cooking when she gets married. Spec. 4 Rail wants a girl who can sew, keep house—and cook.

"I'll gladly help her out," he says, but she's got to be able to cook."

But he's worried about how he'll handle the situation when she goofs.

"Women are very sensitive," he admits, "and you can't scold or criticize. You've got to be very gentle when you correct their cooking mistakes."

'Lilith' Set At the Peak On Wednesday

Warren Beatty and Jean Seberg, under the sympathetic direction of veteran filmmaker Robert Rossen, bring to the Peak Theatre screen starting Wednesday in "Lilith," one of the most moving romantic dramas ever played before the cameras. There is an absorbing power, an incandescent glory, to "Lilith," and a cinematic beauty that adds its own dimension.

"Lilith" is the story of a girl who has created a world of her own, a world of incredible, boundless love which she will not limit to age, or sex, or numbers. She loves everybody and everything; all her life is glowing and simple, until tragic reality smashes its crystalline purity.

In the title role, Miss Ssberg has been acclaimed by filmland and advance audiences for the richness she brings to her characterization of Lilith. She is a girl of wild, widely-ranging mood, sweet and sensuous in the extreme, lovable and hateful quick to anger and to desire. "Lilith" is Miss Seberg's first American film - making venture in several years, during which she became an international favorite for her French "new wave" performances.

Probably the most important young star on the screen today, Beatty appears in "Lilith" as the aimless war veteran whose desire to help people who need help leads to the high tragedy of the film. Attracted to Lilith by her generosity and her sense of wondrous excitement, he is unable to accept the girl for what she is and wants to be; he insists on total possession.

Co-starred in "Lilith" are Peter Fonda, son of Henry and brother of Jane, and Kim Hunter. Fonda plays another unfortunate young man in love with Lilith, hoping she will smile upon him favorably; Miss Hunter, the woman who is trying to help Lilith move out of her crystalline, self-contained world into the world of reality.

Rossen, maker of the highly-honored "The Hustler" and other fine films including the Academy Award-winning "All the King's Men," produced, directed and wote the screenplay for "Lilith." The film is based on the Book of the Month Club selection by J. R. Salamanca, and brilliantly retains the mood of the best selling novel. A Centaur production for Columbia pictures release, Lilith" also features Anne Meacham, James Patterson and Robert Reilly in other powerful performances and meaningful roles.

Bonus Pic At 8th St.

A bonus third feature has been added to the regular program for tonight's showing only at the 8th St. Drive - in Theatre.

Dale Robertson is starred in an all - action hit, "Blood on The Arrow" filmed in color. Thrills on water are depicted in "Racing Fever" starring Joe Morrison. The third and bonus feature, "High School Caesar" is a history of teenage rumbles.

Rio Conchos Now Showing At the Ute

Boone and Westerns are synonymous, and TV buffs are as familiar with the craggy face, wry humor, and lethal fury of this star as they are with their volume knobs.

In "Rio Conchos," Boone plays a former Confederate cavalry officer who, after the Civil War, helps the U.S. Cavalry track down those who sell guns to the Apache Indians. As Lassiter, he has a pathological hatred for all Indians, because his wife and daughter were massacred by a Apache war party. He has become a one man extermination force where Apaches are concerned, in the kind of part Boone plays with that extra added something that only he can bring to Westerns.

For example, Boone made a fortune from five years of "Have Gun Will Travel" but was never satisfied to be merely the star of the series. Boone spotted the weak episodes with a merciless eye and took on the tough task of rewrite, putting into it all his knowledge, experience, and pride of accomplishment.

Business - wise, Boone is one of the shrewdest actors around. His father, a corporation lawyer, explained the facts of legal life to him long before young Richard ever became an actor. He has always based his ventures on sound estimates of worth and has not had the disappointments on his percentage deals that most of his friends have suffered.

"Seventy per cent of such deals would make a good bonfire," he'll tell you, "because most actors haven't been schooled in financial affairs."

Such knowledge, Boone considers a "must" once a performer arrives in the higher echelon of show business deals. But proud as he is of his legal acumen, he is far prouder of his creative know - how, of the drive which prompts him to learn all there is to be known about each character he plays and the general background of the plot. He surprised the cast of "Rio Conchos" on its location in Moab, Utah, with the breakdown he gave them on the sort of an army the U.S. Cavalry was at that period in history.

"An actor has to understand backgrounds and motivations of the characters he portrays," says Boone, "otherwise he'll never give a convincing performance."

Tale of Axe Murderer Set At 8th St.

Producer-director Castle directed this taut new suspense shocker from the screenplay by Robert Bloch who wrote "Psycho," one of the most successful thrillers ever filmed.

Miss Crawford, whose memorable portrayal of "Mildred Pierce" won her an Academy Award, has the support of a blue-ribbon cast including Diane Baker, Leif Erickson and Howard St. John.

"Strait-Jacket" is the story of a convicted murderess who, after 20 years in a mental institution, is released to live with her brother, his wife and her own daughter in a world grown strange, at once kindly and fearful, hopeful and haunted. In the new dimension of this familiar yet alien world, violence pursues Miss Crawford as she tries to sort fact from fancy, reality from nightmare, and to prevent her own past from ruining her daughter's future. A series of brutal murders is climaxed by a startling, stunning denouncement.

Maugham Says 'Bondage' Is His Best

It is not often that a motion picture star, recreating the principal role of a world-famous novel, is able to get the advice and suggestions of the man who wrote the book, particularly if that man is as reserved and difficult to get at as the distinguished author, W. Somerset Maugham.

Laurence Harvey was fortunate in this respect. The actor co-stars with Kim Novak in the screen version of Maugham's novel, "Of Human Bondage," now showing at the Cooper Theatre, one of the most famous works of modern literature, presented by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in association with Seven Arts Productions. The picture was filmed on locations in Dublin and during a period in which Harvey was not required in front of the cameras, he was delighted to accept an invitation to visit Maugham at the latter's home in Cap Ferrat on the French Riviera.

In receiving Harvey in his home, the 90-year-old novelist not only opened the door to a treasure house filled with mementoes of half-a-century of traveling around the world, he also released the spring on memories he had thought long forgotten.

"I have not re-read 'Of Human Bondage' since it was published in 1915," Maugham told Harvey over lunch, served in the vast dining room where he has entertained presidents and prime ministers, kings and consorts. "The book contains a mass of memories, some of them so painful that I have wanted to forget them."

Maugham considers the novel, by his own admission the story of his tormented youth, to be his greatest work. "I am proud of the fact that the original manuscript is in the Library of Congress in Washington," he said.

The author and actor discussed at great length the character of Philip Carey, whom Harvey portrays in the film. In the story, Philip is described as having been orphaned at an early age, and he is shown as a medical student at a hospital in London, both facts of which were true of Maugham's own life Philip is shy, withdrawn and highly sensitive because of a physical affliction. This, too, was young "Willie" Maugham. For his book, Maugham changed his affliction of stuttering to a club-foot in order to avoid too obvious a resemblance.

One of the questions he asked was about Mildred, the beautiful but heartless guttersnipe from the slums of London, who so marked Philip's life. This is the character played by Miss Novak.

"Was she a product of your imagination, or did Mildred really exist?" Harvey asked.

"She did, indeed," the author replied. "She had a horrible fascination for every man who ever met her. We were all her victims and yet, in spite of her faults, we could not help but admire her for her honesty. She never pretended to be anything else than what she was.

New Hotels

New hotels with a total of almost 150 beds have recently opened in Germany and, in keeping with the recent trend, most are equipped with private baths.

COURAGE NEEDED — Medical student Philip Carey (Laurence Harvey) works up nerve enough to ask tearoom waitress Mildred Rogers (Kim Novak) to go to the theatre with him in this scene from "Of Human Bondage," now showing at the Cooper Theatre.

Much against his will, the Baptist country-boy finds himself drawn to the nuns and to their project, and the group somehow raise a magnificent monument to faith and universal brotherhood in the Southwestern desert.

Young Lovers Set for Ute On Thursday

A new and fruitful experiment in gauging advance reaction to a motion picture was made by Samuel Goldwyn, Jr., prior to the release of his new picture, "The Young Lovers," starting Thursday at the Ute Theatre.

This controversial drama of the problems of love and freedom on a typical American college campus, starring Peter Fonda and Sharon Hugueny and presented by Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer, is the first picture which young Goldwyn has not only produced but also directed. He previously produced four successful films.

Because of the nature of the subject matter of "The Young Lovers," stressing the emotional involvement of young people at the college level, Goldwyn exposed his picture to perhaps the toughest audiences in the country — college students and prototypes of the performers in the film — to find out what they thought of it.

Appearing at showings of the picture at various colleges, the producer - director addressed students at university auditoriums across the country and engaged them in open forum discussions about the relative merits of "The Young Lovers." He also distributed questionnaires so that students could more freely express themselves about the picture's subject matter.

Among colleges he visited were Princeton, Yale, M.I.T., the University of Houston, Missouri, Kansas, Georgia, Vassar, Washington, North Carolina, Duke, Wayne, Wesleyan, Carnegie Tech., Purdue, Michigan, Hollins College and U.C.L.A. where much of "The Young Lovers" was filmed on location.

According to Goldwyn, this unique method of "previewing" a movie for the people about whom it is made has given him a cross - section opinion not only about "The Young Lovers" but about the industry in general that no research poll would be able to duplicate.

"I started at Princeton at the request of some faculty friends," he explained, "and the response was so stimulating that I decided to try other colleges. There is enormous interest in movies among the students these days. They want to know about film technique, about the economics of the business, about the effect of foreign films in Hollywood."

'Ladybug' Now Playing At Broadmoor

Regarded by many as a triumph of the same stature as their internationally - acclaimed "David and Lisa," the second motion picture offering of the brilliant husband - wife team of Frank and Eleanor Perry, "Ladybug Ladybug," is now at the Broadmoor Theatre.

As with "David and Lisa," the new offering, a Francis Production released through United Artists, was produced and directed by Perry from a screenplay by his wife, Stephen F. Kesten was associate producer and the music was composed and conducted by Robert Cobert.

And, like its famous predecessor, "Ladybug Ladybug" is described as a tense, incisive and understanding story of children—based on a story by Lois Dickert, from an actual incident, telling what happened in a rural school when an alert signalling an imminent atomic attack went off accidentally.

While the adults roles in "Ladybug Ladybug" are played by professional actors, mostly recruited from the Broadway stage, the cast of upwards of a hundred youngsters who appear in the film are mainly non-pros, recruited from the classes of the rural school in Gradyville, Pa., which was "location" for the picture. They are all around 10 years old.

'Invasion' Set Next At the Chief

That master of suspense Gene Corman, who among other things is largely responsible for the screen villainies and horrors of Vincent Price, brings his most ambitious—and suspensful production—to the screen in his United Artists release "The Secret Invasion," in DeLuxe Color and Panavision opening Wednesday at the Chief Theatre.

An original by Screenwriter R. Wright Campbell, and starring Stewart Granger, Raf Vallone, Mickey Rooney, Edd Byrnes and Henry Silva; and introducing the new Italian "find" Mia Massini. The suspense in "The Secret Invasion" revolves around five desperate convicted criminals who are offered their freedom in return for a dangerous secret mission into Nazi-held territory in World War II.

Their chances for success are not high and failure means a Nazi firing squad. But the men accept, knowing they have little to lose even if it is their own lives. There is no motivation of patriotism.. All they want is their freedom. But Fate, as it so often does, takes a hand and turns all of these desperate men into patriots. It is all brought out in a typically Corman suspense - laden manner. The film was directed for the screen by Gene's brother Roger.

A graduate of Stanford University, Gene entered the entertainment field as an artists' representative. Among his clients were Ray Milland, Fred MacMurray, Joan Crawford, Harry Belafonte and Anna Maria Alberghetti. But picture making —especially suspenseful picture making—intrigued him and he became a producer. His productions were released by such toppers in the industry as United Artists, 20th Century-Fox, Allied Artists and others.

It wasn't, however, until he "wedded" Vincent Price to the master-horror works of Edgar Allen Poe, that Corman really hit his stride. Horror and suspenseful as they were, however, it was pointed out that they all received first-class production with on-location shots instead of studio shooting whenever and wherever possible. Much of their success is ascribed to this, and this realism has become a Corman hallmark.

This insistence upon authentic background, in fact, coupled with eye-filling scenery is what took Corman and his company to the ancient fortress city of Dubrovnik in Yugoslavia for most of the action in his "The Secret Invasion," which concerns an attempt to solidify anti-Nazi opposition behind Nazi lines.

This kind of insistence was also responsible for the high critical and audience acclaim his "The Intruders" won some seasons ago.

Dubrovnik was also chosen by Corman because it was easy to find actual members of the Balkan underground there in quantity—men who actually solidified opposition against the Nazi intruder, and fought them. Most of these men still had the uniforms and arms they used in the real thing.

And it is from the territory adjacent to Dubrovnik from which the beautiful feminine lead of "The Secret Invasion" comes. Miss Vassini is described as a classic beauty. She has never been seen before in an American picture but her efforts in European productions have won her the coveted European Pula Award.

The cast of "The Secret Invasion" also includes the redoubtable Enzo Fiermonte, expugilist champ who gave up his ring career to marry Madeleine Astor of the famous Astor clan. A crack horseman and auto racer in addition to his fighting prowess, Fiermonte plays his 9th film role in "The Secret Invasion."

Ute Sets Two Horror Hits For Friday

In keeping with the Friday the 13th legend that it is a 'dangerous' and sometimes unlucky day, the Ute Theatre has scheduled two horror hits for a Friday the 13th midnight show. In keeping with the theme, the doors will open at 11:13 p.m. for this special show.

The first feature, "Frankenstein - 1970" stars Boris Karloff and Jana Lund. Frankenstein secretly recreates a legendary monster in his German castle and it, in turn, proceeds to victimize members of an American TV troupe. The second feature is "Daughter of Dr. Jekyll" and stars John Agar and Gloria Talbott. In this horror drama a girl is hypnotized by her guardian into believing she is the werewolf daughter of Dr. Jekyll.

Inasmuch as this is a special dual program, it will be shown only once on Friday the 13th at midnight and will require a separate admission tickets which are available in advance at the Ute box office. Only capacity will be sold.

Devil Doll At Starlite On Wednesday

A grim killer stalked backstage at a London theater to provide a sequence of horror that dominates the screen excitement of "Devil Doll" coming Wednesday to the Starlite Theater. Underneath the suspense and horror that prevades throughout "Devil Doll" is a scientific question that long has been the subject of medical probing and the dramatic imaginings of novelists and playwrights:

"Can a human being control the actions, the voice, the body and the soul of an inanimate robot to obey, without question all orders. . . .even an order to kill."

Scriptwriters George Barclay and Lance Z. Hargreaves came up with a film interpretation of this problem that, in the script of "Devil Doll," becomes a spellbinding study as it pursues, with relentless logic, this portrayal of a crazed hypnotist who, after victimizing the young and the beautiful, himself falls victim to his mechanical mountebank.

Films in the past, from the much-applauded "Cabinet of Dr. Caligari" to the many "Frankenstein" interpretations, have used the theme of soul transmutation as a basis for dramatic suspense.

Co-starring with Haliday in "Devil Doll" are William Sylvester, as the reporter who unmasks the villian and Yvonne Romain, beautiful young British star, who makes her debut to American audiences in the dramatic role of the unhappy victim.

From all reports, "Devil Doll" promises to be one of the truly outstanding horror films ever to come to the Starlite Theatre.

'Six-Sahara' Going Strong At the Chief

Miss Baker, notable for several portrayals of sultry, sex-charged women, turns in a wickedly effective performance in "Station Six-Sahara." Her role is that of a frustrated, promiscuous wife determined to shed once and for all an ineffectual husband. By trying to kill her in a car-crash, the husband only succeeds in throwing her in with a group of isolated, woman-starved men who work in a Sahara Desert oilpumping station. If the situation among the men was tense before she appears, it grows stormy and savage when she does. A solution is produced, however, by the ex-husband who manages to stab her to death.

The script, written by Brian Clements and Bryan Forbes—the latter was responsible for the scenario of the outstanding movie, "The L-Shaped Room"—is literate and well-paced. The photography of Ray Sturgess takes full advantages of the North African locations where much of the "Station Six-Sahara" was filmed. Seth Holt's direction kept the tale of swirling emotions on the move, and Ron Grainer's score provides interesting support for mood and performances.

Miss Baker is ably backed by a set of excellent European actors. Peter Van Eyck is caustic and driving as the German manager of the station. Ian Bannen is graphic as a bitter and woman obsessed Scotsman; Denholm Elliott makes telling a difficult role as a weak-willed Englishman who dreams of former glory; Jorg Felmy brings bite to his part as another German who rivals the boss of the station; Mario Adorf has impact as a lonely and taciturn Spanish workman; Bill McGuire puts pathos and realism into the role of the abandoned husband.

'Hunter' Set Wednesday At Cooper

The baffling circumstances surrounding a tragic air crash are the subjects of "Fate Is the Hunter," Twentieth Century Fox release in CinemaScope which opens Wednesday at the Cooper Theatre. The script by Harold Medford is based on Ernest K. Gann's book of the same name, a saga of the airways by the same man who wrote "The High and the Mighty" and "Island in the Sky."

Glenn Ford stars as Sam McBane, the man ordered to investigate the causes of a jet airplane disaster in which the only survivor was an airline stewardess, played by Suzanne Pleshette. The dead pilot, played by Rod Taylor, is accused of pilot error, and McBane must vindicate him and the airline. McBane has a personal interest in the matter, since he and the pilot were old friends who served together in Burma during World War II.

But McBane's initial investigations turn up no facts. He can find no logical cause for the accident. McBane knows that the pilot always believed in Fate, insisting that he would die when his time came, and not before. In a number of flashbacks, he is shown escaping death time and time again during the war. Even the beneficiary in his will, played by Nancy Kwan, feels that Fate is the reason for the crash. She thinks that it was the pilot's day to die, and that any investigation is a waste of time.

McBane is inclined to agree with her, but he must pursue the investigation if only to clear his friend's name. Eventually he does uncover the true circumstances behind the crash, vindicating his friend and Fate, too.

Co-starred with the above are Wally Cox, Nehemiah Persoff and Mark Stevens. Jane Russell also appears in a cameo role as an actress who entertains the troops in World War II.

"Fate Is the Hunter" was produced by Aaron Rosenberg and directed by Ralph Nelson, of "Lilies of the Field" fame. Photography was by Academy Award winning cinematographer Milton Krasner.

BY DICK KLEINER
Hollywood correspondent
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

Bewitched seems to be one of the hits of the new television crop — proving once more that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery; nothing succeeds like success, and the special effects man is quicker than the eye.

This is the ABC show which has Elizabeth Montgomery, Dick York and a script full of electronic trickery designed to (a) amuse and (b) show My Favorite Martian that two can play that game.

Building a show on the foundation of magic creates some special problems. And, says Miss Montgomery, the entire company is acutely aware of how much magic means to them

"We say," she says, "That Mr. Magic is our costar."

Mr. Magic turns out to be a very temperamental costar, too. To perform the stunts you see on the screen—moving objects, disappearing actors and such—isn't easy.

"Working with Mrs. Magic," says Miss Montgomery, "is like working with an actor who takes long lunch hours — and comes back to work stoned. And yet you can't do without him."

The MAGIC IS ALWAYS PRESENT on the set. Virtually every scene is rigged for some sort of stunt. And so the actors are always conscious that they are playing second fiddle to trickery.

Take, for instance, a scene in which Miss Montgomery's witchcraft is supposed to make an actor disappear.

"That's one of the hardest things on the cast," she says. "What happens is that we play the scene and then we get to the point where the disappearance takes place, everybody has to freeze and the actor who disappears slips out, then the action is resumed.

"To try and recapture the pace again is very difficult.

"Sometimes, this freezing involves many people. We just did a scene like that in a restaurant setting. There was a whole roomful of people who had to freeze. If any one of them had moved even a tiny bit, well, we'd had it, and we'd have to start all over."

DESPITE THE PROBLEMS, the temptation to toss a lot of magic into the program is almost irrestible, since obviously the public likes it.

"Our major problem," Miss Montgomery says, "is to keep the amount of magic down. We're aware of the danger of just having one joke. And we are hoping to make the characters so attractive that eventually the reliance on magic will lessen."

Director Bernhard Wicki is bitter about the way 20th Century-Fox cut "The Visit," the film he directed with Ingrid Bergman and Anthony Quinn.

"They cut 25 minutes from it," Wicki says. "In this are a few scenes with an antireligious quality, which were important to the whole thing. As a result, the film lost its bitter quality."

"In Europe, a director has control over this. Here, I had nothing to say. I can only hope that the studio knew what it was doing."

'Sylvia' Set For Two More 'Take' Days

George Maharis will appear in the added scenes to be filmed at various Pittsburgh landmarks. Co-star Carroll Baker, not required for the special footage, sailed on the Queen Mary for the London premiere of Joseph E. Levine's "The Carpetbaggers."

Based on the novel of the same title, "Sylvia" is a Martin H. Poll production for Paramount release. Gordon Douglas directed the big-scale production which also stars Joanne Dru, Peter Lawford, Viveca Lindfors, Ann Sothern and Lloyd Bochner.

BAGHDAD—Iraq is buying a large stock of drugs and medical supplies.

Two Organists Featured In Special Concert Here

A special concert, featuring two virtuosos of the organ, will be presented at 8 p.m. Tuesday at the Chief Theatre.

The concert will feature both the electronic organ and the mighty pipe organ which was once used to accompany silent movies in the theatre here.

Bob Zadel, who remodeled and repaired the Chief theater organ earlier this year and presented a concert there will emcee the special show.

Featured will be Dick Hull and Don Kingston, both master organists.

In addition to the organ concerts, Zadel said a vintage Charley Chaplain film will be shown. This will be accompanied by one of the organists on the theatre instrument to demonstrate how the organ was used in the days of the silent movies.

Zadel also said that he hopes to bring back some of the "Bouncing Ball" shorts in which the audience is invited to participate in the singing.

The first half of the concert will feature a concert on the electronic organ and a demonstration of the theatre organ and how it was used.

The second half will feature the silent film and another organ concert. Both of the organists will concentrate on popular music, Zadel said.

Hull was born in Cleveland Ohio. His mother was a church organist but Dick began to study the paino until he saw the theatre organ in action at the age of 7.

After that experience, young Dick turned to the organ and at the age of 14, he was offered his first job as second organist at the McTodd Theatre in Cleveland. He later moved to the Willouby Theatre.

Later he went into radio and theatre work in Rochester, N. Y. and played the Lowe's Rochester Theatre. From there he went to California as staff organist for a leading theatre chain and also began a career as an arranger.

After the war, Dick returned, this time to the nightclub circuit on the West Cost. He went to New York to work for an electronic organ firm and while touring for them decided to stay in Denver where he now plays night clubs and theatres and also is employed as a technician for a pipe organ firm.

Don Kingston was born in Philadelphia, Pa. To his mother, a musician and an actress in early silent movies, must go the credit for Don's ability to entertain. To his father, a sales executive, must go the credit for his personality and ability to make everyone like and respect him. When Don was in his early years, his family moved to Beloit, Wis., and while a student at Beloit High School, he first became intrigued with music as a career. Once entwined in the world of music, Don pursued it with a vengeance at Wisconsin, Montana State and Northwestern Universities. Interruptions in his educational pursuit were common to him as he paid his own way. Don, however, capitalized on these delays by gaining invaluable experience in "show biz" and practical organ playing, a host of friends, plus a good look at America.

For some years, Don has resided in Chicago where he has had no trouble in keeping busy. For 7½ years he was the featured organist at Willow - Brook Ballroom, which is famous for featuring name bands. Even with this excellent competition, Don had a reputation of attracting as many or more dancers to the floor than when the bands were on stage. Don has filled his daylight hours through the years with many hundreds of private organ lessons, he has made various solo recordings, served as accompanist for countless name bands, and made innumberable radio and TV appearances.

In 1956 Don was the official organist for the National Democratic Convention and not to show favoritism, he repeated for the Republicans at the 1960 Convention. His record "Discovery of the Willow-Brook" will be on sale in the lobby of the "Chief."

Tickets for the concert are $1 and may be purchased in advance at Conn Organd Piano Studio, 110 S. Tejon St. or at the Montgomery Ward Ticket Booth.

Joseph Cotten Is Quite A Renowned Schlopper

By DICK KLEINER
Hollywood Correspondest

HOLLYWOOD (NEA) — The next time you're out shopping for a painting, ask the maitre d'oil if he happens to have an original Schlopping.

Aroused Hollywood. Schloppings are in rather high favor this year. Not that they are great art. But most people know that the name "Max Schlopping" in the corner of the canvas is the nom de brush of Joseph Cotten.

"When I started painting," Cotten says, "I called the things I did 'my sloppings.' Out of that came the name Max Schlopping which I still use. And I still call my works my 'Schloppings.' "

Cotten doesn't have too much time to Schlop these days. He continues to be one of Hollywood's busiest — and consistently most professional — actors. Latest work is "Hush . . Hush, Sweet Charlotte," the Bette Davis-Olivia deHavilland film.

Actually, painting is only third in priority on the Cotten market. After acting comes "building," an all - inclusive term for various do-it-yourself projects he enjoys.

"I am a compulsive builder," Cotten says. "I must have something going on all the time. I just fisished a 10-foot-high wall around my property. Even when I lived in a New York apartment, I had a fully equipped workshop."

Acting will probably always be first, although Joseph Cotten is not one of those superdedicated sorts. He takes things as they come. Fortunately, they come with pleasast regularity.

"Theater is getting bigger here in Hollywood,' " Cotten says. "It's part of a general cultural renaissance around the country — we're on a culture kick.

"Patricia (his wife Patricia Medina) and I have toured a great deal lately, and we find so many cities have built new cultural centers. A strange thing about them — they always seem to have cost $12 million. That seems to be the going cost of culture these days."

It's winter in Peyton Place now. And they couldn't have picked a worst time for winter. The television show is filmed at the 20th Century-Fox lot, and right now California is having one of its usual autumn heat waves. So you see Ed Nelson and Mia Farrow and Dorthy Malone and the others togged out in boots and coats and mufflers and hats with ear flaps, while the thermometer registers a wintry 94.

Paul Monash, who created and produces the series, wanders around (is a cool sports shirt), overseeing his product. Whatever you may think of Peyton Place, this twice-a-week continuing series may make a lasting impression on television programming.

There have been rumors that ABC wants to increase the Peyton Place dosage to three a week.

"I'll never do that," Monash says. "It wouldn't make any sense, economically."

You may be interested is these facts about the series, all expressed by Moash:

New characters will be introduced from time to time; the logistics of planning particular shows for holidays (like Christmas) are too difficult, so there will be none; there are 15 similar shows being planned by other studios, there is really very little similarity between the television series and either the original novel or the movie.

Real Life Tragedy Makes For Meaningful TV Drama

Allan Scott, distinguished screen writer and playwright, wasn't trying to sell himeslf to "Ben Casey" producer Wilton Schiller when, at a chance meeting, Scott revealed the rage he still feels when he remembers how well-meaning friends treated his wife after whe was paralyzed following a fall three years ago.

Intrigued by Scott's real-life narrative, Schiller urged him to detail it on paper. Out of this came "A Thousand Words Are Mute," Scott's first teleplay, with his daughter, Pippa, guesting in the role suggested by her mother's near-tragedy.

"On the surface it looks like a collusive effort," Scott declares. "But, believe me, I had no intention of writing for television, and when I did finish my maiden effort, the casting of my own daughter was furthest from my mind.

"I take great pride in my daughter's skill as an actress but for this TV role, I was sure Schiller would cast an older performer in the 'big name' category.

"I didn't consider my daughter's strong will. She read the script and badgered Schiller until he gave his assurance that the role was hers. To my great delight, the producer and others in the know say it is one of the best Caseys ever filmed, and Pippa gives an Emmy-caliber performance.

"All I can say in my own behalf is that it pays off when you write with conviction and firmness."

To strip the story of any maudlin sentiment and still tell it with realistic conviction, Scott changed the lead character from a housewife to a school teacher on the verge of marriage, and altered the circumstances of the fall that caused the paralysis.

"What enraged and baffled me in my wife's case," Scott explained, "was the misdirected way her friends approached the problem. As she lay helpless, mute, and in deep depression, she was treated by friends, and people who should know better, like an infant. That was the wrong approach I accent vigorously in my script."

With the help of her husband, who spent months abroad researching her problem, and a speech therapist, Mrs. Scott, the former Broadway actress Laura Straub, won her way back to a near-normal existence and regained her will to live.

Allan Scott has won the right to be labeled "distinguished" on several accounts. The first graduate of Amherst to be awarded a Rhodes scholarship, he became a Broadway playwright at an early age with "Good-Bye Again."

In 1943 he won an Academy Award nomination for his original screenplay, "So Proudly We Hail." Also to his credit is the screenplay for the Ginger Rogers-Fred Astaire film hit, "Top Hat."

Scott's newest play, "The Third Side of the Coin" starring Ginger Rogers, goes into rehearsal soon, and will reach Broadway after a country-wide tour.

Meanwhile, the long vigil over his wife has ended, and he has lively discussions with her over his venture into television.

SOPHIA LOREN

* * * * * *

Israelis Love Italians-- Especially Sophia Loren

NAHARIYA, Israel — The lushest, loveliest item under the sun in the "land of milk and honey" these days is a black-haired beauty from Italy — Academy Award winning actress Sophia Loren.

Since her arrival in Israel, Sophia Loren has been feted and followed, loved and lionized by the entire nation. The crowds who gather every place she goes have made her as much an attraction here as the tourist spots and religious shrines she has had to visit in secret.

Every ounce of affection the Israelis have offered her, Miss Loren has returned with interest. Her primary purpose here is to star in the Paramount Motion Picture "Judith," a romance adventure story in which she plays a woman scarred by the concentration camps of the Third Reich.

Her daily routine leaves little spare time. Almost every morning she wakes before the sun has risen. She breakfasts in her penthouse apartment atop the Dan Carmel Hotel, which gives her the single most advantageous view of the impressive Haifa harbour.

By eight a.m. she is before the cameras, either on the "Judith" Kibbutz — named "Gates of Galilee" — or on one of the picture's numerous locations: an Arab market place in ancient Acre, a mountain road above Haifa, a beach, an orchard or atop a tractor in an unplowed field.

"I love it here," Miss Loren said. "There is an energy about the country, a sense of life and an awareness of the future, that makes one tingle."

Miss Loren will need all her vaunted energy if she is to surmount her rigid shooting schedule on "Judith," which is being directed by Daniel Mann. Among the things she has to do for the camera is be slung over the side of a ship in a crate, race through an Arab-crowded market with co-star Peter Finch, do a 20-mile-long strip-tease in the cab of a truck with Israeli actor Shraga Friedman, seduce England's Jack Hawkins who plays an English Major, and fight for her kibbitz against an invading Syrian army.

Meanwhile, Miss Loren's "secret" trips around Israel have become the talk of the country. Whenever she has a day off she tries to visit somewhere different. The problem is that she must do it without advance warning. So far she has visited Nazareth; Tiberias, on the Sea of Galilee; Jerusalem; and even Israeli Army trenches within sight — and sot — of the Syrian border.

By now, each local newspaper and magazine has devoted reams of paper to telling its readers everything from her eating habits to her feelings about visiting the places where Jesus Christ lived and preached.

Producer Kurt Unger, whose company, Cumulus - Command, is making "Judith" in Technicolor and Panavision, feels there is nothing unusual in using this famous Italian to play the role of a German - Jewess. "Sophia's beauty and talent are international," Mr. Unger said. "She can be anything she wishes on the screen — except, perhaps, unattractive."

The story of "Judith" was, in fact, specially written with Miss Loren in mind. Its author was the famous Lawrence Durrell, who wrote the novels known as the Alexandria quartet. He wrote a novella based on the character "Judith," which became the basis for the screenplay.

Time will come for Miss Loren to leave here and move on to another country and another film. But as she says, "I will never forget my time here. Playing in 'Judith' has been an experience both emotional and challenging."

The Magnificent Misadventures of

Or How the Americans Nearly Missed the Tour

By BOB LEFEVRE, Editor

To begin with, it was not Pepe's fault.

A motor trip from Mexico City to the fabulous resort town of Acapulco some 300 miles south of the capital city is an every-day occurrence and various travel agencies undertake the excursion on behalf of Norte Americanos daily.

It was the car.

Loy and I were in Mexico City for our first vacation out of the country. The day before, we had been met at the airport by Jesus Espinoza, a gracious representative of Garza Embassy Tours, S. A. He had driven us to the Hotel del Prado giving us our first opportunity to practice our anemic Spanish. And he had warned us to be ready on the following morning, promptly at nine, for the trip to Acapulco.

So we were in the lobby at 9 a.m. No guide.

At 9:30, a delightful young lady, Elsa Jacobsohn (father German, native-born) stationed in the hotel to assist mournful Americans unaccustomed to the ways of the land of manana, phoned the Garza people. (We didn't trust ourselves on the telephone with our meager verbiage). Yes, a car was on its way and should produce a guide any minute.

9:45 a.m. No guide.

At 10 o'clock he came.

"Call me Pepe," he advised. Stoop-shouldered, with a chest like a pouter pigeon, inclined to paunchiness and with a broad Mexican face radiating good humor and infinite concern, this was our Pepe. We followed him with the inevitable baggage wrestler to the parking lot. With a flourish he left us at the entrance to the lot advising that he would pick up the car and come to us in "un minuto." We waited. Cars entered the lot and cars left.

At the rear of the lot we saw an ancient Cadillac, its dark interior containing human passengers.

"That must be the car," I guessed. Loy agreed. We stared at the car. It stared back without blinking. Nothing stirred. The Mexican sun gleamed and traffic snarled and weaved behind us in the street. Suddenly, the door of the Cadillac opened and Pepe emerged and made his way to us.

El automobile would not start. Would we be so kind as to now walk to the car and sit in it? Perhaps this would start the car? We complied. Our baggage was safely stowed in the commodious rear compartment. We were introduced to our tour companions in the rear seat, a Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Schoenemann of Houston and a friend traveling with them. They had been sitting in the car for nearly an hour. It would not start with them. With us in the car. . .perhaps.

The Cadillac was a 1952 eight-passenger limousine, black and dour of countenance. Pepe tried to start it again. The battery provided only indifferent incentive. Changing places with Pepe I tried to start the engine. The starter merely growled.

"Is no good," commented Pepe. "The car, she is muy malo." We saw no reason to disagree. "I go to phone the Garza. They will send a mechanico to start it or they will send another car. . .a beeg one."

Pepe left us in the parking lot and we visited with our new companions. 10:30 came and went.

The Mexicans are a sensitive and subtle people. On the windshield, along with various stickers attesting to the car's reasonableness, its utility, its dependability, its gross tonnage and other pertinent data having meaning to various government regulators, was a decal attesting to the virtues of Alka Seltzer for headaches.

We sat on the car's upholstery, and viewed the rear of the Hotel del Prado from the parking lot. Not an auspicious beginning.

Pepe returned, beads of moisture adorning his furrowed brow. "They send another car right away," he confided.

So we all sat.

"Pepe," I said, "this car should be retired because of old age." "No, senor," he appealed. "The car she is fairly new. Only 1952. See, the mileage."

Some 49,000 miles were registered. When they were recorded we never learned for that figure remained fixed.

Eleven o'clock arrived. We were due in Cuernavaca for lunch. Cuernavaca was 50 miles away. No substitute vehicle appeared. No mechanico.

Pepe turned the switch and tried again. The motor roared into half-life, coughing, sputtering, and clouds of blue-black smoke poured upward around the doors. I am no mechanic and my ear is not thoroughly practiced. But I will wager my Mexican sombrero that no more than five of the eight cylinders ever worked on a single revolution of the engine. Take it from an amateur, the timing was off, the gaskets were shot, the muffler was gone, there was enough carbon in the engine to grill a dozen charcoal-broiled steaks. But the engine kept going.

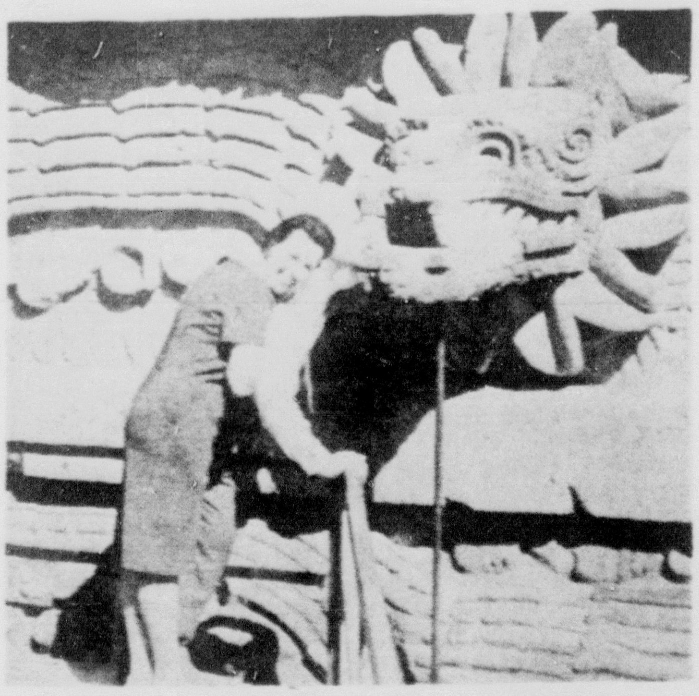
We might limp painfully to a garage, I thought.

But we were off to Acapulco, as it turned out. First, we had to stop at another hotel to pick up a sixth and final passenger. He turned out to be Ray Britton of San Francisco who, with his luggage, occupied the jump-seat area. I obligingly kept my foot on the accelerator when Pepe helped him into the car. If the motor died again, we were finished. With each revolution of the engine it seemed as though the vehicle had breathed its last carbon monoxide gasp. But it kept on. And presently we were rumbling through the crowded streets of the capital city.



FOR LUCK MAYBE?—Bob and Loy just had to go up and give this image of the Aztec God Questzalcoatl a kiss and an affectionate pat after their wild hectic ride in Pepe's Wonderful machine—a ride they were thankful to survive.

CORTEZ BUILT 'EM?—These are some of Mexico's great pyramids. This one is located just north of Mexico City and was not included in Pepe's great tour. But according to that erst while tour guide and top - noction driver, Cortez must have built them.

Momentum, I found, was difficult to attain. Pepe would crowd his foot to the floor. The car would gradually lurch forward, responding with infinite reluctance. But once obtained, the momentum was equally difficult to arrest. The Pepe foot would seek the brake pedal and our forward motion would slowly subside.

But this was no time for concern. We were off through the crowds of pedestrians surging into the streets, and the traffic, utterly oblivious of rules and normal procedure to which we were accustomed with our staid and sober ways, thundered and roared about us.

A traffic light is turning against us! Pepe cannot stop! He cannot mean to try. But he does. The foot to the floor, the great black car slowly becomes stationary. We are jutting into a main street of cross traffic which flows about us like a river interrupted by a massive black boulder. I caught the accelerator just in time and the motor did not die. The light changed. We oozed forward again.

The heat of the bus came to us through the open windows. But there was no rending crash, no sound of tortured metal. Just the deafening roar of five non-synchronized cylinders firing spasmodically.

Then we are away toward the south, barreling along. We are all alive. It is Mexico, the fabled land of the Aztecs, the source of the riches of the Indies; it is vacation time and we must have no care. Besides, with the car now in motion, we must not stop.

BURROS BEWARE—Unfortunate animals such as this one at the entrance of Taxo didn't stand a chance against Pepe and his wonderful machine. Pepe didn't bother to slow down for the beasts and if they didn't move, the wonderful machine nudged them out of the way.

The driver is supposed to recount the places of interest. Occasionally, Pepe opens his mouth to tell us something. But the roar of the Garza limousine is richochetting off walls, trees, fence posts and buildings, drowning most efforts at communication.

There on the right is the huge new stadium a-building for the 1968 Olympics. We were supposed to stop here for a tour through the Mexican University. We'll have to miss it now. Make way for the Garza touristas!

Pepe began to rely on his horn as we left the environs of the city. It was only fair. It would have taken a Mayan monolith to halt our forward pace at the astronomical speed of 40 miles an hour. With the grace and verve of a Patton tank we thundered into the startled countryside.

The vegetation is lush. At first the avenue is a divided highway and the ubiquitous Mexican buses, battered and discarded Greyhounds and some rather newer models, dodged slowly aside as we plunged upward.

Pepe advises us in shouts and gestures that the road will climb from Mexico City's plateau of 7,200 feet upward to nearly 10,000 feet before it turns downward again toward our luncheon stop at Cuernavaca. So we may not halt on this upward spree. The momentum, so dearly bought, must be maintained at all costs.

The foliage is delightful and green. Huizache trees give way to pines that look like Colorado Ponderosa. Then there is the Tejocote tree with masses of small orange-colored fruit. "Used to make candy," shouts Pepe.

Look out, there's a burro moving slowly across the road. The horn! The burro is indifferent to our reverberations and we whiz by with a scant few inches to spare.

The Mexicans fence their horses, burros, cows and bulls OUT of the fields. The animals crop the verdant waste lands between the roads and the fences. That way, nothing goes to waste — unless it is an animal run down by the Garza express. Look out for that cow! Vaca. . . vaca. But we are safely past.

We pass the town of Tres Maroias on our right. It is a village, we are corrected, not a town. The inevitable twin spires of the church, a huddle of adobe dwellings, and people, people, everywhere. More cattle — and here a tiny burro, with a still tinier and more woolly infant by her side. The mountains shatter back the echoed response to our clattering pistons.

The horn works at intervals. Pepe's foot is flat on the accelerator. The road narrows to a two-way track of asphalt. It begins to curve more tightly. We do not slacken speed. The big cab sways sickeningly as we screech around the turns. Now to the right; now to the left, the rear tires never cease their wail.

We enter the clouds. Far off and under the glowering canopy we see across a great valley lit with sunlight. Cuernavaca is in that valley and we must come down the slope we have braved so noisily. Pepe will slacken pace now. Not for a pepper tree! We are holding on to anything that comes to our grasp including each other. This is a ride to make John Gilpin and Paul Revere look to their steeds.

There's a hairpin turn to the right. But who has hair? This is too much. We'll be over the side, a heap of steaming wreckage. No. . .Pepe made it, although we swayed back and forth to recover the center of gravity.

There is only one course now . . .Cuernavaca must get out of the way. We are coming into town. Forgotten is the hour. . . past one o'clock. Forgotten is our luncheon date. Surely, we cannot go rocketing through this town without a pause.

No, we cannot. Traffic is up ahead and Pepe shifted to his other pedal, the brake. Speak to me not of the lack of feeling of Cadillacs. Seven right feet in that car applied the brakes with Pepe. Surely the noble vehicle responded to our combined efforts. We slowed, bending forward as the momentum flowed ahead of us like a great bird and we decelerated, just in time to see that policemen are mounted on little boxes at the curb and, if you understand what their gestures mean, are directing traffic. The streets through Cuernavaca are indifferently paved and the direction of most of them is not clear. We wound down hill, roared and growled through the narrow roadways, with startled peons pressed back against their buildings. Then, at the bottom of a steep incline we turned sharply right, and the big car throbbed and rumbled slowly up the incline.

There is a parking space on the right at a ninety-degree angle from the broken curb. Pepe swung the wheel and we stopped, right side up and all in one piece.

Shaken and dazed we climbed out of the car. Fluid spurted from the rear door as though the poor old Cad had been gored by El Toro. Think nothing of it. It is only the hydraulic fluid by means of which the windows are raised and lowered electrically. From here on we will not raise the windows. They are open and we shall taste of Mexico's insect life from here to the sea.

Pepe had turned off the motor. Que sera sera. We will spend our vacation in Cuernavaca for surely that big motor will never utter another ear-shattering explosion.

But, let us be gay. It is vacation time. And we are hungry, aren't we, Pepe?

"No, senor. We come here to see the cathedral, one of the oldest in Mexico, built in 1529 by Cortez." (It turned out that nearly everything in Mexico was built by Cortez, as Pepe remembered it.)

So we toured the cathedral. It was impressive with its massive flying buttresses, its giant wooden doors, hand-carved, its magnificent nave and huge baptismal font carved from a single stone eight feet across. Some idiot had redecorated the space behind the altar with a coat of shocking pink calcimine. But the grandeur of the structure was only slightly marred by this modern intrusion.

Now we shall eat, eh, Pepe?

"No, senor. You will be surprised. We have a special place for you to eat but it is not in Cuernavaca. It is beyond. Now we visit the Jardines Borda, built by the first Mexican silver king in the 17th century."

We toured the gardens. They were impressive. Magnificent oleander trees and jacaranda and guava groves. An inland lagoon for romantic moonlit nights with an orchestra playing. Pepe apologized for the fact that the gardens are somewhat run down. Even hunger pangs and a nearing 2 p.m. hour could not entirely dampen our ardor. It was a breath of the past, a glimpse into the days of the grandees.

We returned to the car. It sat limp and tilted on the side of the hill in a pool of its own fluid.

Pepe climbed in with a great show of confidence and flicked the key and the starter. It worked. The tranquility of Cuernavaca was blasted from its siesta. A bribe to the policeman and we were permitted to back into traffic, halting the flow.

We headed down the hill, picking up momentum, and turned again to the south. The massive palace of Cortez, built in the same year as the cathedral, was explained to us as we sped by. We should have taken the time to see it, too. And we learned later from the guide books that there are many marvelous shops and luncheon places in Cuernavaca. But Pepe had a surprise for us, he had said. So a few brief sentences about the Conquistadores and we were on our way again.

Only a few miles more and we turned from the main road, heading into the verdant countryside. This road we were on now plunged between vast fields of sugar cane. It would proceed proudly for several hundred yards of asphalt only to end in a spot where there was no pavement and the ruts were so low the bottom of the big limousine scraped and rasped as we jounced through. This side trip was only about three miles long. It consisted of eleven mud holes and ten patches of pavement. We navigated the depressions and with difficulty surged through the better stretches. Suddenly, we were in a tiled courtyard with cobblestones ahead leading to the gateway of a magnificent hacienda. A crew of men were paving one half of the roadway with cobblestones. The other half of the roadway was occupied with wandering turkeys, wandering pigs and a couple of burros. Stacks of cobblestones, grass grown, were heaped up beside the road.

WHEN DO WE EAT?—This is the Cathedral in Cuernavaca that Bob and Loy found so beautiful despite the shocking pink behind the altar and the fact that Pepe wouldn't let them eat either before or after they arrived until they reached another town. The tourists didn't mind though after they tasted the food they had missed earlier because of Pepe's wonderful machine and his insistence they act like tourists first.

"You see," said Pepe, "how long it takes for the owner to fix."

We saw.

This was the Hacienda Vista Hermosa, also built by Cortez, as Pepe had it. It appeared to be of 18th century construction, but I am no expert. And Cortez had lived a long time. But the place was a pure delight. Great stone arches supported the roof of a tremendous court in which vintage carriages were housed. Across a patio and into another wing of the structure and we came to a giant dining hall, where wandering musicians played guitars and sang, and finally we could eat. The place was well filled and obviously a popular spot, in spite of the difficulties in getting to it. So we ate lunch and quieted our jangled nerves. Things took on a brighter hue. We had only to go to Taxco that day. And this town was only another 30 miles farther on. Surely, we had weathered the worst of it. We were to stay at the Hotel de la Borda that night and then drive on to Acapulco the following day.

Fortunately, the car did start. Painfully, we re-negotiated the dusty axle-scraping holes and made our way back to the main road. But the main road was now a mountain highway. It wound and twisted, with Pepe picking up speed on every downward slope. The foliage was gorgeous and the tires shrieked in ecstasy around each bend.

We thundered into Aniajuzac, the land of the iguana, where bright-eyed descendants of the Aztecs held giant lizards at the end of strings for our inspection as we lurched past. A herd of goats blocked the road. We swerved to the far left, slackened pace slightly, bellowed a gasoline crescendo at the startled creatures and got through without striking an animal.

The horn sounded at intervals, punctuating the roar of the muffler-less exhaust. An occasional insect came in to ride with us. We dashed through a minor rain cloud and enjoyed a brief splattering. We shrieked around a curve, a donkey stood his ground in the middle of the road and got off with a bumped rump — a wiser mule, one can hope.

Loy said to Pepe, "I guess you really do need that horn." At that moment, Pepe's hand on the horn produced no sound. It simply quit. Surely, it could make no difference, I thought. There was no person or animal in all south Mexico who could be ignorant of our passage to the coast. And the acrid smell of our exhaust would remind them for hours of our cloudy jet-stream.

With no horn to occupy his attention, Pepe gave himself wholly to the task of keeping the plunging behemoth on the pavement. The squeal of the tires rose in pitch. We were shoved against the door on each left-hand spin, and my knuckles turned white as I gripped the back of the seat and held on.

More animals. And men, mounted and dismounted. Everyone busy, everyone preoccupied, everyone calmly taking life's way as the Garza five-cylinder limousine hurtled by . . . a Pepe's comet.

PEACEFUL TAXCO—In such a lovely and quiet town as Taxco, Bob found it was best to rise about 4:30 a.m. just to take in the breathtaking beauty of the early morning. What else was there to do at that hour when choirs began singing, cocks crowing, brass bands playing and people shouting. Who needed to sleep?

The shadows lengthened and just at dusk we reached Taxco, the fabulous mining center where Jose de la Borda had taken out 40 million in silver pesos when the peso was worth 50 cents.

The streets of the town are all cobblestoned. Taxco is perched on the side of a mountain and although all streets are used vehicularly in both directions, many if not most of them can be used only in one direction at a time. They curve radically, making sharp turns at steep inclines with rarely more than a twelve to fifteen-foot width between the walls of encroaching buildings.

We blasted into Taxco, grumbled protestingly down an incline, darted across an opening in front of oncoming traffic, turned left without signalling and then spiraled upward into the roadways of the fantastic Hotel de la Borda. We swerved under an arch and then to rest on the brink of a precipice. The car heaved a sigh and a geyser of steam rose from the hood. We were there.

We eased ourselves from the car and looked about. I offered to help Pepe push the car over the precipice — and then had to explain that it was not Pepe, but the car that had caused the anguish.

We spent the night at this Taxco hideaway.

Pepe promised to have a new car for us by morning. He assured us that the Garza people would not want him to drive this car without the horn. But during the night Pepe had the horn repaired and apparently the gas tank and radiator were also re-filled. The windows remained open. The car was pronounced to be in excellent shape when we were ready to proceed in the morning.

I cannot pass by Taxco without recounting, however briefly, the startling experience of spending a night in this wonderful place. In spite of the jostling and the beating our ear drums had received, Loy and I decided the place was worth every bit of it.

A fiesta was underway. One party told us they had a fiesta every day. Another said it was a special occasion. I do not know. It happened to be my birthday and I was content to note all the celebration being conducted, never mind the object of the celebration.

The hotel rests on top of the mine shaft leading into a rich vein of ore. The mine is being worked now, and a monstrous derrick used for hoisting men or ore, I know not which, is perched just beyond the cobblestone court. At intervals a siren sounds, signalling a change in shift.

The hotel is on one side of a ravine, with most of the town on the other side. Thus, every sound of the bustling town echoed into the Borda hotel. We had a magnificent room overlooking the town and its several churches and cathedrals. One of the churches was outlined that night with incandescent electric bulbs. From its court, rockets, roman candles and bombs were thrown into, the air at intervals.

Every church and every cathedral had its own set of bells. These ring, chime, clang and bang at quarter-hour intervals. Since no church bothers to synchronize its bells with those of the other churches, the result is an assault of bells that continues without interruption all hours of the day and night.

To add to our enjoyment, packs of dogs roam the streets and bark, making everyone feel safe. Between the sounds of the dogs and the clangor of the bells, there was a brass band working out in the plaza and a marimba combination working out on the Borda terrace.

We were advised there was to be a cock fight on that same terrace and we sat up to see it. But it was called off. We found out why. The cocks were needed to crow the advent of breaking day, and not a rooster could be spared. For every dog in Taxco, there is a matching rooster.

I lay on my bed with recollections of Mexican countryside whizzing past my tightly shut eyes. A thunderstorm broke out, lightning played outside the balcony of the room and thunder clapped and applauded.

At 4:30 a.m. (I checked) a choir of children came marching through the town singing magnificent songs. At 6:45 a.m. the brass band began to tune up again. At 7:00 the siren went off. It went off again at 7:45 and again at 8:00. In between we had the dogs, the roosters, and shouts of a pleased and happy peasantry enjoying life. Who says Mexico is full of langour and sleepy peons? Surely, no one in Taxco ever sleeps. It is impossible.

But once more, after a splendid breakfast, we rumbled through the cobblestone streets in Pepe's comet, and wound our way out of town and on toward Acapulco.

Events were exactly as they had been the day before. The roads were as mountainous, although Pepe had assured us that we would find a long, straight stretch. We did. It lasted for about two miles and then we were back with our curves and the despairing wail of tortured rubber.

Suddenly there was a dreadful clatter and banging right at the steering post — something serious this time, from the sound of it. But Pepe, never at a loss, struck the dashboard with his fist and shouted that the instrument panel was coming off. A mere nothing. But it wasn't the instrument panel and I am not certain what it was. It turned out to be a very diverting and very loud new sound of disintegration. I finally concluded that it was the end of the speedometer cable, worked loose behind the instrument panel and engaged in demolishing all the wheels and screws and other gadgets that occupy space there. I am not certain. I was busy hanging on.

It grew hotter as we approached the coast and came down from the hills. And then, speeding up one hill with the momentum gained coming down the preceding slope came the unmistakable thud, thud, thud, that told of a flat tire.

We were forced to stop, with the car still pointed up hill. Then came another revelation: We had no jack or tire changing equipment, although we did have a spare.

But Pepe was undaunted. He would get the Yanks into Acapulco no matter what. He hailed a vehicle going the other way. The driver of that car, another tour guide, I suspect, obligingly halted, got out his jack and wrench and then proceeded to do most of the work of changing the tire.

But we were not out of difficulties. With the car elevated and the demolished tire half off, the car suddenly swayed and fell off the jack, narrowly missing Pepe, and completely wrecking the rim.

We touristas, who had been preoccupied with the native flora, came to the rescue and with the car jacked up again we literally held it on the jack, while the spare tire was bolted into position.

And that was the end of the adventure. In a very few minutes we came up over the last hill and there ahead of us was the view that had arrested Balboa's vision so long ago. We swooped down into Acapulco and at our hotel bid a fond and affectionate adios to Pepe.

We will probably never see him again. But we want him to know that we nominate him as the most determined driver of the year. Personally, I would have driven that mournful vehicle into a garage and left it as a repository of spare parts.

Our trip in Mexico was a delightful experience. But the highlight was our mad dash to Acapulco, which gave us a real adventure. When it came time to leave, we went by air.

Head Given Laurel Award

Miss Head, who holds seven Academy Awards and countless other honors, was the only costume designer winner in the trade publication's 1964 accolades for motion picture achievement. Her plaque reads, "A Special Award to Edith Head, who dresses up the movies and generates news in the world of fashion with the creations that are seen in each of her films."

Pigfish Ain't

Leisuretime Viewing

Checked for viewing this week is NBC's premiere SUNDAY of “Profiles in Courage”, a series based on the late President Kennedy's Puitizer - Prize winning book. The first episode is the Oscar W. Underwood story which deals with the Ku Klux Klan issue at the 1924 national Democratic convention in New York. U. S. Sen. The convention, one of the most dramatic in this country's history, ran 15 days and 103 ballots. Portraying Underwood will be the fine actor Sidney Blackmer. Artist Saul Bass will create the main titles for the series, an added reason for tuning in, as he is the one who did the prologues for “Walk on the Wild Side” and “It's a Mad, etc. World,” and the epilogue for “Around the World in 80 Days.”

BEHIND BARS—Mistakenly incarcerated when he visits a jail to help put on a variety show, Rob Petrie (Dick Van Dyke, left) learns there's no honor among thieves when his cellmates won't tell the guard he's not really a convict, in the second episode of a two-part story on "The Dick Van Dyke Show" Wednesday, Nov. 11 on Channel 11. "The Alan Brady Show Goes to Jail" features Arthur Batanides (second from left), Robert Strauss and Vincent Barbi (right) as Petrie's cell-sharers.

And Still Talking

Joe Tucker, veteran National Football League play-by-play commentator, enters his 29th season this year handling Steelers game broadcasts.

THE HAGUE—Two firms will carry out a search for oil in the North Sea.

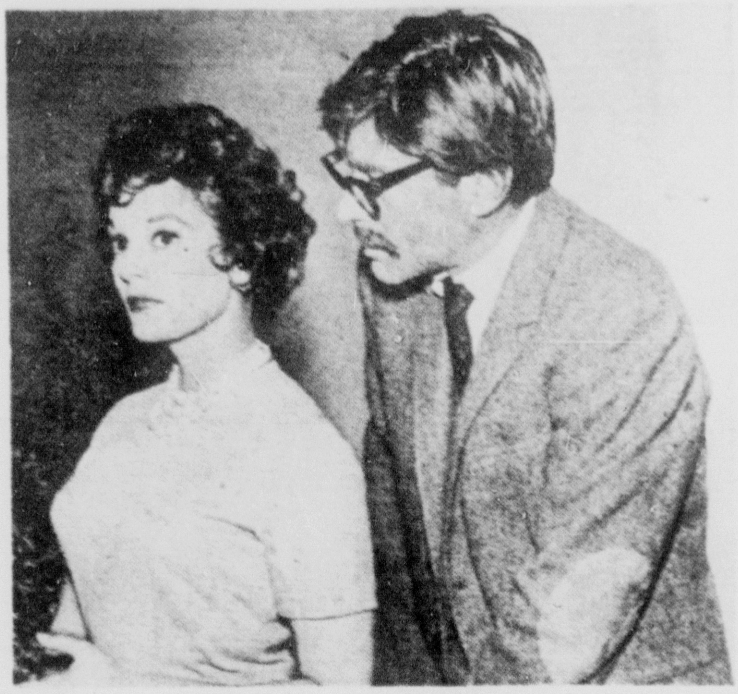
Wilde Set For Moscow

DUBLIN (AP) — Michael MacLiammoir travels to Russia this winter with his one - man entertainment, "The Importance of Being Oscar."

The program of dramatized readings of Oscar Wilde letters and poems is to be performed in Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev. A tour of Spain and Portugal is planned for next spring.

Forecaster

One statement that sounds like an old wives' tale is actually a scientific fact. According to Compton's Pictured Encyclopedia, you really can tell the temperature by listening to the chirp of the cricket. Both field and tree crickets vary the speed of their chirps with the temperature. One can estimate the temperature by counting the number of chirps per minute, dividing by 4, and adding 40.



ON 'HITCHCOCK HOUR'—Patricia Medina and Efrem Zimbalist Jr., star in "See the Monkey Dance" on NBC-TV's "Alfred Hitchcock's Hour" Monday. Roddy McDowall also stars in the suspenseful tale of a man's lethal scheme to cover a tryst with a married woman.

Thrawt Warts

A tendency for warts to dry up and disappear has given rise to many superstitious beliefs that warts can be charmed away by magical spells or practices. The belief that warts are caused by handling frogs and toads has no basis in fact, according to Compton's Pictured Encyclopedia.

SPEECHLESS — This bearded wrestler (professional grappler Jay York) is left somewhat speechless, as the Masked Marvel — it's really Herman Munster (Fred Gwynne)—ties him up, in "Herman the Great" on "The Munsters", Thursday, on channel 11. The referee, Tiger Joe Marsh, is former world heavyweight wrestling champion.

IN ROME WITH SOPHIA — The glamorous international star Sophia Loren stands before the imposing Fountain of the Rivers by Giovanni Bernini in a scene from her warm and personal insight into the eternal city on ABC-TV's "Sophia Loren In Rome" Thursday, on Channel 13. The special program, televised in color by the five ABC-owned stations, will also feature Sophia's friend and frequent film co-star, Marcello Mastroianni.

You Might Say Blackmer Lived His 'Profile' Role

Sometimes the real world and the world of make - believe coincide in an uncanny manner.

That's what happened in Sidney Blackmer's case when he agreed to star in the title of "The Oscar W. Underwood Sto- Courage," which premieres Sunday, Nov. 8.

"The circumstances were strange — right from the beginning," Blackmer said "I was actually reading a copy of 'Profiles in Courage' — the story" on NBC-TV's "Profiles in I got a call from Robert Saudek, executive producer of the series, who asked if I would do the Underwood show."

The Underwood story deals with the U. S. Senator from Alabama who had to choose between principle and the Presidential nomination in deciding whether to attack the politically powerful Ku Klux Klan or accept its crucial support at the Democratic convention in 1924.

Blackmer, who bears a striking physical resemblance to Underwood, agreed to go to Hollywood for the show, after obtaining his leave of absence from 'A Case of Libel," in which he was starring on Broadway.

However, the leave of absence was suddenly withdrawn, according to Blackmer, and he was told that he must decide one way or the other — either he could stay with the play, and its guaranteed six - month run, or he would be replaced permanently if he left to do the Underwood show — on week's work — for "Profiles in Courage."

"The scene seemed like something right out of the Underwood story — only it was real," Blackmer said. "I had given Mrs. Saudek my word and I go back on it. So I said to those concerned, 'Kindly withdraw my name.' I didn't know it at the time, but the line was identical with Underwood's own remark."

Blackmer gave the impression of a man who could live with himself, as he spoke of what happened.

Had he any regrets? This time he quoted Underwood consciously:

"NBC Follies of 1965" is the title of the first "sneak preview special" of the 1964-65 seaon starring Steve Lawrence, with Juliet Prowse, Jill St. John, Allan Sherman and Nipsey Russell as guest stars.

Lawrence will headline a novel television concept for music, variety and comedy, which will be presented in color Friday, Nov. 27. The Bitter End Singers will make their TV debut on the full - hour special.

After earning fame through his vocal versatility as a TV, nightclub and recording star, Lawrence added new laurels to his career by starring in the title role of the current Broadway hit, "What Makes Sammy Run?" His TV appearances included the memorable "General Motors 50th Anniversary Show," Dinah Shore Show" and a Summer series with his wife, Eydie Gorme.

Miss Prowse has danced her enchanting way across the world. She began her career at the age of 4 in dancing class in her native Johannesburg, South Africa, and it kept constantly on the go performing for motion picture, nightclub and television audiences. Her TV credits include "Tonight," and Bob Hope and Perry Como specials.

Miss St. John, who has an I. Q. of 162, is vivid proof that beauty and brains can go together like love and marriage. The redhaired actress has shown her flair for comedy and drama with roles in such films as "Honeymoon Hotel," "Come Blow Your Horn," "The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone," "Tender Is the Night," "Holiday for Lovers" and "The Remarkable Mr. Pennypacker."

Sherman is the "O-shaped" comedian who has written material for other top comedians, has been a successful TV producer and, though he sings like "a strangling mynah bird," has four hit albums in his repertoire. The versatile Sherman will also star in the season's second "sneak preview special," entitled "Allan Sherman's Funny Land," in mid-January.

Russell, who began his career as a dancer at the age of six, has been in show business 33 years. After he discovered delivering fast lines was more rewarding than delivering fast steps, he was instrumental in making Harlem's Baby Grand one of New York's most famous clubs. He made 15 appearances on Jack Paar's NBC-TV "Tonight" show as well as filling guest engagements on other top TV programs.

The Bitter End Singers are a young folk - singing group of three males and three pretty girls. The trade paper Variety described them "as commercial a collection as has yet been put together."

'Pop Art' Would Be More Popular If the Populace Would Peer at It

EDITOR'S NOTE: Sue is Leisuretime's distaff answer to all the Angry Young Men of the world. And what made Sue angry was reading Artist Tom Reaney's devastating appraisal of so-called Pop Art (Leisuretime, May 23, 1961). In his article, Tom took issue with the so-called artists who created these things and with the museums for displaying them. Sue, who just read the issue, saw red, white, blue, black, yellow and orange and started to scream in protest. In the end she wrote it down and here it is —her article in defense of pop art.)

By SUE LOEWINSOHN

Gazette Telegraph Staff Writer

How easy it is to become outraged against those tricky devils, the artists, who would capitalize on our gullible natures and foist off mere trickery, mere publicity - ploys upon us, demanding that we hang absurb monstrosities with outrageous price tags in our living rooms. Why, my five year old son could do better with a glue - pot and an old Life magazine. Ho ho ho, you sneaky artist, you can't fool me this time!

I've heard that sort of thing many times. It used to be the little old lady who stood near us in the Museum of Modern Art, indignant that someone would try to have us believe that an arrangement of red white and blue oblongs was great art. Ho ho ho, exclaimed the little old lady, you can't fool me this time.

But she was fooled, because the painters of red white and blue oblongs and people with two profiles have fooled us all and have become even greater artists than our five year old children.

Now, I will not say that "pop" art will take its place in some future realm along with the Mondrians and the Picassos. I am not saying that a hundred years from now Andy Warhol, painter of Campbells soup cans and blow-up movie posters will rank with the immortal of art.

I am merely saying that its easier to be fooled into an easy condemnation, than coaxed into an elusive, but legitimate, appreciation of these things.

I am merely saying that its easier to be fooled into an easy condemnation, than coaxed into an elusive, but legitimate, appreciation of these things.

Let us first examine the dilemma of the painter. He sees ALL things and gives us only his personal selection of them, magnified, or intensified by his own personal way of seeing. The artist selects from what he sees, filters his visions through what he knows, makes it all with a frame and places it before us. . . .for us to like, or not to like, but essentially for us to SEE.

How many easy critics of any new art form have really tried to SEE what was placed before them before they discounted it?

What about those swarms of angry Frenchmen who almost destroyed what must now be millions of dollars worth of Lautrecs and Seurats and Manets and Monets in a fit of collective hysteria that anyone would have the presumption to paint with great ugly blobs of paint and put green shadows on a womans face?

Well, what about these "pop" artists? What are they actually doing?

For the most part they will will isolate this thing, paint it for us, magnifying its peculiar visual properties and then place it before us saying, "There! Have you ever really taken a good look at this thing?"

We've seen thousands of Campbell's soup labels, but how many of us have ever concentrated on what it was we were looking at, as an isolated arrangement of colors and lines instead of an accepted thing, a label that only conveyed to us that we were holding a can of soup in our hands.

We were all raised in the golden age of the comic book, and have long since been accustomed to accepting two-dimensional caricatures of people who spoke to each other in balloons and who were all composed a little universes of tiny colored dots? How fascinating, how marvelous! To my mind it takes an artist of genuine vision to see all this, to take a really good look at how all these things hang together, and to tell me something completely new about something I've known all my life.

OK, say the detractors, but what I think is these guys get together and try to dream up something weird that will get them a lot of publicity and then they can charge $3,000 for something that took them half an hour to paint and got them a lot of laughs. They're just putting one over on us, they say.

Maybe. But I knew one of those guys, one of the real phonies. This little wretch painted with tractor wheels (press invited) and gilded himself for the opening of his show (press also invited). This guy would lie awake at night dreaming up new ways to get paint slopped on canvas, and would call his agent every time he came up with a new gimmick. He was the one who started the thing about rolling paint-covered girls across expanses of canvas.

He was a fad for a while back on the West Coast, but what did he ever see or give that had any validity? Nothing. He had no visions, and no skill to speak of, and he had no personal, communicable idea of the way things look.

I say the "pop" artists do.

OK, say the detractors' but would you pay $3,000 for a soup label to hang in your living room, or $7,000 for a papier-mache sculpture of a suit jacket on a hanger?

No, I wouldn't.

But since when have we become so shallow as to value art for its decorative qualities? I wouldn't want the tomb of the de Medici's hanging in my living room, either, or the Laocoon, or the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel. Painting is still, & will always be, an intellectual art, a constant regeneration of experimentation, and a constant search for what has never been done before. There are artists adept at re - creating beauty, and there are artists adept at stimulating our vision to see something we've never seen before. If an artist has taken the time and the presumption to set something before me, I'll try to see things the way he saw them, and I will try to get his message.

So go into a gallery and laugh at a blown - up re-creation of a comic strip and giggle over a painting of a Brillo box or a soup label.

Who ever said that laughing wasn't an entirely valid reaction?

The "pop" approach has been tried in other art forms... in experimental music that utilizes the literal sounds of the every-day world. . . .in experimental drama, little vignettes called "happenings" that attempt to re-create an entire instant of the artists entire consciousness by the utilization of all th sneses.

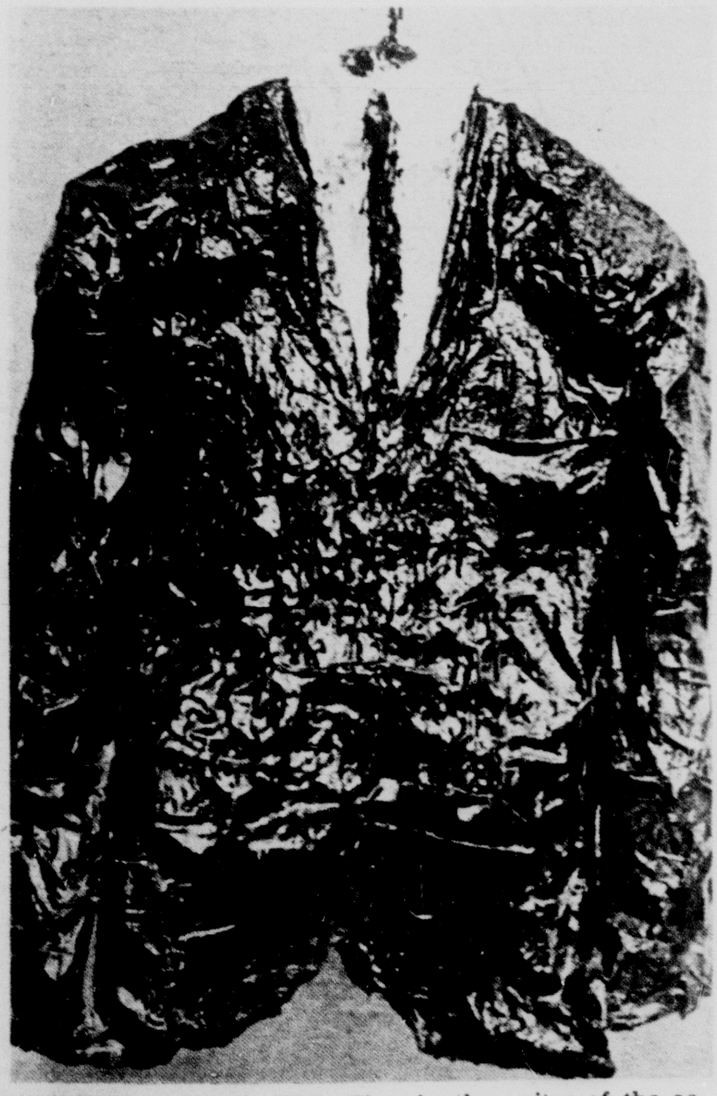
Because what is the artist, after all, but someone whose eyes we borrow for a while, whose mind we attempt to climb into, whose words we roll around in our brain, someone we try to become in an effort to receive the message he is sending out? This is why we learn, why we grow, through the sharing of experience. You may like the shared experience, or you may not, you may reject it or keep it. . . .

But before you ho-ho-ho the artist out of your life, give his vision a chance. You've got nothing to lose.



NEITHER WOULD SHE—That is, the writer of the accompanying article said she wouldn't pay $7,000 for this work of "art" to hang in her living room. But she contends that it and other examples of pop art have more than "decorative" value. (Gazette Telegraph Photo)

The Waggin Wheelers had a big crowd for their masquerade Halloween dance on Friday night with Bill Renck of Pueblo calling. Several couples from Pueblo came with their caller. First prize for men's costume went to George Bennett, and first for the women was won by Ila Palmer.

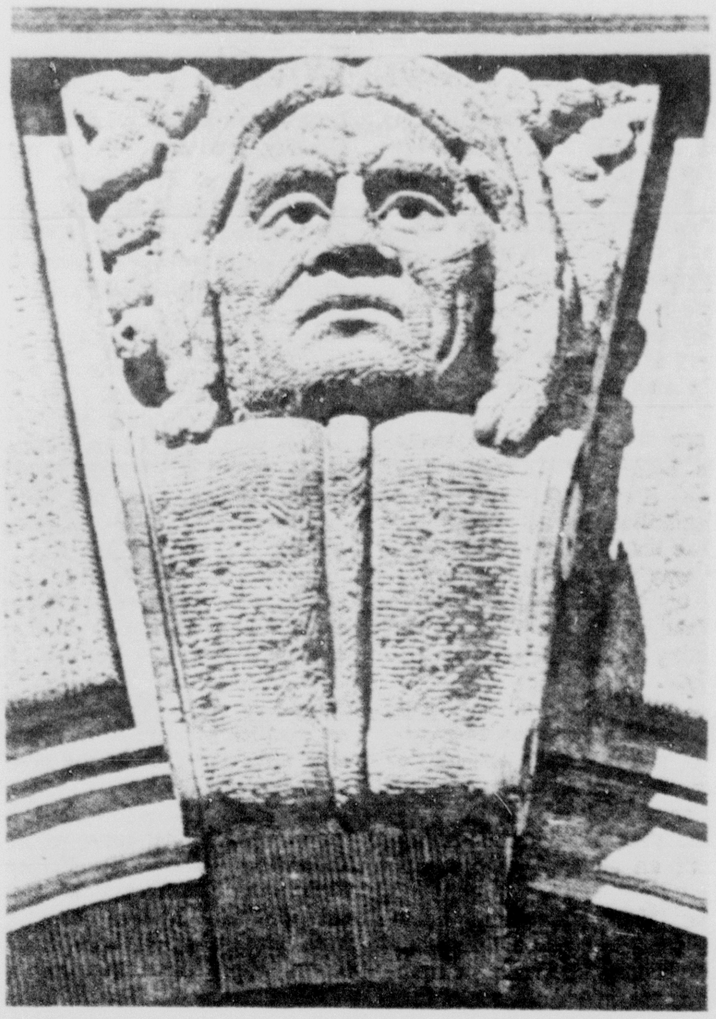
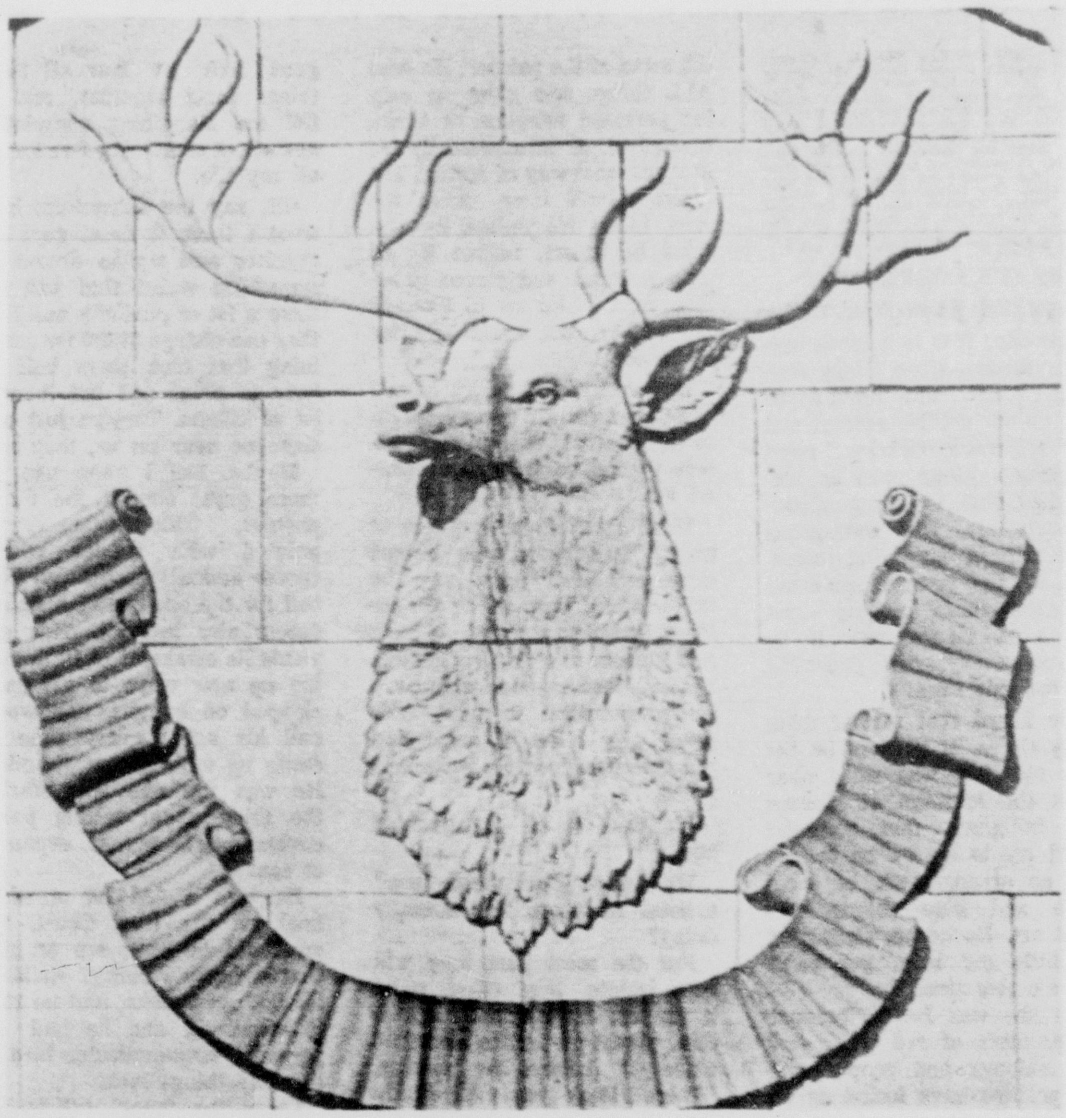
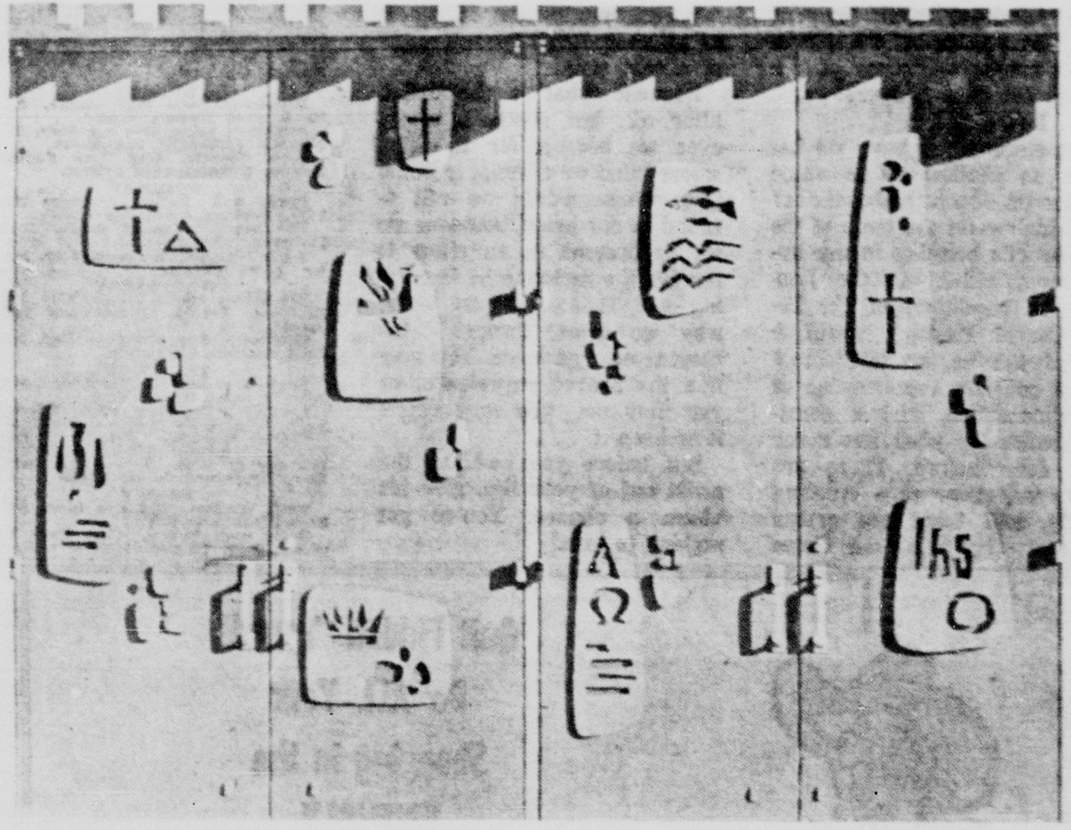
The Art Around Us Is the Art We



CHISELED STONE — Expressing impregnability, this Indian face is one of several that looks to the mountains and plains from the El Paso County Court House.



VISUAL ASSOCIATION—A stately antlers head, graced by its ribbon embellishment, overlooks the entrance to the Antlers Garage, 20 W. Pikes Peak Ave.



CHRISTIAN SYMBOLS—Sculpture by Edgar Britton on the metal doors of Immanuel Lutheran Church depict symbols of the Christian religion, including the fish, early symbol of Christ, and the Greek letters of Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end.

STONE TRACERY—Harmonious relationship is evident in this Hellenic design seen on the South entrance to the Colorado Springs City Hall.

Never Notice Until It Is Gone

Some Call It Ornamental But Others Say It's Art

Text By Marguerite Mitchell
Photos By STAN PAYNE

Many gallant groups across the country devoted to the preservation of architectural sculpture and ornament are seeing to it that such decorations don't end up in the junk heaps.

When landmarks topple, they stand by to pick up the pieces — the garlands and graces of the structures — to cart them off to resting places where indecades to come they may be studied or simply admired for their decorative delicacy of a bygone era.

The sparkle of many is dimmed by time. Others have been hidden by new fronts of clinical detachment.

In other days, texture played a dual role in architecture; it expressed something of the quality of the materials and it gave a particular quality of light.

There was vigor to refinement.

Soon these laurels for glory, wheat for plenty, sphinxes, gargoyles, and other architectural art works will be gone, as clean lined buildings replace the ones decorated with Ionian and Dorian motifs.

America may yet express herand indecades to come perhaps and in an architectural style, we too will be copied.

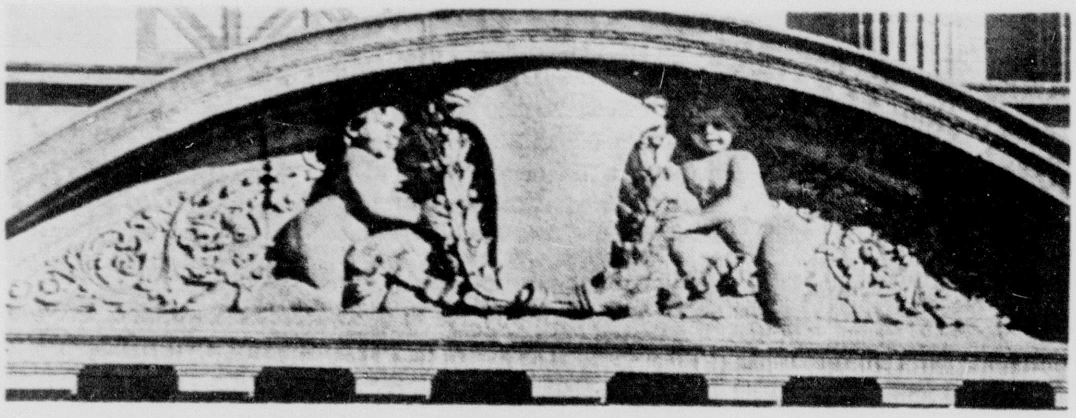
MEDIEVAL STYLE—The roof line of the building at 25th Street and Colorado Avenue reflects the vigorous strength of the architecture of the Middle Ages.



FORM AND FUNCTION — Two smiling cherubs, supporting a plaque, look down on visitors entering the El Paso County Court House. Acanthus leaves are again used in this Hellenic design.

SYMBOLIC SHIELD—Resembling a broad piece of armor, this carved emblem is over the entrance to the Masonic Temple.

CARSON MURALIST—Pride and Joy of the children's ward at the Ft. Carson Hospital are paintings and murals which Major automobile shows this season. Its 5th Admin. Company, and Pfc. Bruce Rae, a mail clerk at 529th Signal Company. Pointing to a cup in one of his latest paintings, "A Mad Tea Party," is Meyer.

Annual 'W' Ski-Race Is Set Today

The 2.8 mile race will begin at the foot of the road up "W" mountain at 10:30 a.m.

The race originated as the final ground training for the Western State ski squad, but has grown to an event open to anyone who can pass the physical examination.

Larry Damon holds the record time of 18 minutes 5.6 seconds. The race was won last year by John Burrett, Hotchkiss, Colo., who was in training at the time for the Olympic biathlon team.

Western State ski coach Sven Wiik has asked that spectators not drive on the road once the race has begun. Dust and exhaust fumes are a detriment to the competitors.

About 50 participants are expected to try for the honors and possibly a new record this Saturday.

Double Exposure

A coincidence in program sceduling finds Martin Sheen appearing in two successive episodes of "The Defenders" on the CBS Television Network in early November. Sheen, now performing on the Broadway stage in "The Subject Was Roses," has a cameo role in "Turning Point," as an innocent man who goes to the electric chair. A week later, in "A Taste of Ashes," he's one of three men accused of a bizarre crime at sea.

Among performing artists already signed are The Beach Boys, Lesley Gore, The Rolling Stones, Marvin Gaye and Jan and Dean. In all, there will be 13 "name" recording acts in the show, which will be staged before live audiences for the Theatrofilmings.

Simultaneously with the announcement of Electronovision's newest production, Sargent disclosed there will be a tie-in between "Teen - Age Command Performance" and the recently-formed Teenage Awards Music International (TAMI). The latter, a non - profit California corporation among whose purposes is to advance, promote and encourage the understanding and appreciation by teenagers of all forms of music, will conduct a balloting among the millions of youngsters who will attend the theatrical showings of the Theatrofilm, to determine their favorites in a variety of categories.

As a prologue to "Teen-Age Command Performance," a nationally known personality will appear on-screen to welcome members of the audience and to explain to them the purpose of TAMI, and to request them to vote. Executive director of the TAMI aspect of the over-all production will be Jack J. Reeves.

Kibbutzers Kibbitzers For Film

The 465 members of the Matsuba Kibbutz in Nahariya, Israel, where Paramount's "Judith" is being filmed, have taken to movie making in a big way.

Many members of the communal settlement have been employed as extras, truck drivers and carpenters, while others have pitched in with painting, landscaping and technical advice.

Because of their participation in the picture, which stars Sophia Loren, Peter Finch and Jack Hawkins, they feel they have vested interest in the film and a right to watch each and every sequence go into the can—and director Daniel Mann agrees.

Noticing a group of kibbutzniks engaged in animated discussion as he planned a difficult tracking shot down a dusty road, Mann asked an Israeli assistant what they were talking about.

Quick Breather

A porpoise, like those at the Miami Seaquarium can hold its breath for four or five minutes under normal conditions, but under stress or panic only about half that time. Normally, porpoises surface for air about every 30 seconds.

ARTS CHRONICLE by John Fetler

Great Conducting Great Art, Schippers Declares

WHAT IT TAKES — Not everyone can be an orchestra conductor, that's assumed. It's the case even with other types of conducting. But just exactly what does it take is, equally, a difficult thing to pinpoint, as can be seen from a recent AP interview with 34-year-old Thomas Schippers, who is one of the youngest and most acclaimed of the world's orchestra conductors.

Schippers goes so far as to say that there is a kind of "hypnotism" in conducting. He explains: "It is an art of mesmerism. You hypnotize the orchestra into doing what you want. It is something in one person's personality.

"What does a great conductor have that a mediocre conductor doesn't?" Schippers is very frank about it. He says: "I don't know. One can make a list. First, a great gift of communication — the kind of personality that can convey, be it musical matter or business matter. The musical director of an orchestra is a leader of men, and who ever has been able to explain what a leader of men has?"

"It has nothing to do with camaraderie. The conductor is able to get the musicians out of themselves. They will play and realize later that what they did just wasn't possible.

"You know, I think the public underestimates conducting as one of the performing arts. It demands more to be a great conductor than to be a great pianist or a great violinist. You have to have everything."

As for his own conducting, Schippers says: "I have very few theories on good conducting. The only important one is that the only way you can conduct well is to have the music so much inside you that it comes out by itself. Of course, this demands a lot of study.

"The most important thing about technique is that with experience you can absolutely forget technique. I have completely forgotten my technique. I never for a moment think of how to do something. A few years ago that was half the battle — how do you get 100 men to do what you want when you want?"

During the time he is in front of an orchestra, Schippers says, "I absolutely am in another world. I think about nothing else." And, asked to comment on his skill, he says: "I can't do it. But I do think I'm the most responsible person I've ever met. I've never missed a performance or a rehearsal."

Of course, it must be borne in mind that Schippers could almost be called a "born" musician. That is, born in Kalamazoo, Mich., he played piano at the age of two, began studying at four, and at 14 went to the Curtis Institute of Music to study organ, piano and composition.

But his start as a conductor, as it has happened in many other cases, seems to have been more or less accidental. It does not appear that he had a career of conducting in mind. In his case, Menotti had hired him to help prepare the singers for his opera The Consul and to play piano in the orchestra. Menotti became ill during tryouts in Philadelphia, and Schippers was asked to fill in.

"It's very hard to explain why I stayed a conductor," Schippers says. "It all went so fast. I didn't know what I was doing. I found myself conducting all over the world. Within a year I was in London, Paris, Italy." The reason why it went so fast, of course, that his talent was immediately recognized.

But, he says "to this day I could not say I was born to be a conductor. I still feel if I had to change tomorrow, it would be possible. I have to make music but I don't have to conduct."

And, he warns that "a danger for some new conductors is the glamorous position. The very idea of commanding 100 men pushes their egos to a far point. That ego I know I don't have. I don't need an army to command. I think some men need that a lot, but I don't."

Which, again, brings the issue back to the observation that apparently there is no one rule that can be applied to successful conducting, but that it "just happens," — with talent, of course.

TROUBLES OF SCRIPT WRITER — The script is one of the most important things in a musical, even though the music itself is what most often decides the popularity of a show. Jack Gaver, UPI drama editor, gives an interesting insight into the trials and tribulations of those who write the scripts for musicals, and his opinion is that they are born losers, no matter how many successful shows they may have been connected with or how much money they make.

"So, one of these poor souls," he writes, "turns up with a zany comedy sort of show that is a hit. The critics either ignore him or belt him and give the credit for the success to the composer, the lyric writer, the director, the choreographer, or a star named Carol, Zero, or whoever.

"Or, the show is a serious affair, and he's told that whoever did the West Side Story script did this sort of thing better, and that the show works only because of the composer, the lyric writer, etc.

"The latest member of this suffering clan is William Gibson who wrote two fine dramas in Two for the Seesaw and the Miracle Workers. With a record, and money, such as that," writes Gaver, "I'll never understand why he wanted to put his reputation and sanity on the line by serving as librettist for Golden Boy," which is playing at the Majestic in New York.

Says Gaver: "If he stuck closely to the original successful play of the same title by the late Clifford Odets and made it work, the credit would go to Odets. If he more or less rolled his own, the discredit would go to Gibson if things turned out badly.

"Well Golden Boy appears to have turned out to be a popular item after months of traumatic preparation but, as usual, the librettist is low man on the totem pole.

"Producer Hillard Elkins' reason for wanting to do the show was to provide a vehicle for Sammy Davis. This meant changing the Italian-American boxer of the Odets original to a Negro youth. Otherwise, the original libretto, by Odets himself, stuck fairly close to the play, but the tryout tour showed that didn't work.

"With Odets dead, Gibson, his friend of long standing, was called in, along with a new director, Arthur Penn, and they started all over. Many gambits were tried in the weeks that followed before the definitive version at the Majestic was achieved."

Changing Face of Africa Shown in Colorful Books

THE LAND AND WILDLIFE OF AFRICA — By Archie Carr — Time, Inc. — $3.95 — This is truly a feast for the eyes of lovers of the wilds, with a dazzling array of colors. From lions to okapi, from the kings of the Nile, the crocodile, to lemurs, from the grasslands to the snowy majesty of the Kilimanjaro, the book gives quite a vista of colors and sights, of the African continent. Perhaps not since Stanley and Livingstone have the African wilds been presented to the mass audience, as this book does.

But it is more than entertainment. It is chock-full of fascinating, informative material. F. Fraser Darling, vice president of the Conservation Foundation, explains, "something new is certainly coming out of Africa these days, something just as dramatic as the appearance of unknown species like the okapi and the African peacock. We are discovering patterns in the fabric of life in which the habits and life histories of individual species of plants and animals are the threads.

"It is (now) moderately easy to watch the larger animals, to find how they use their environment, how they differ from each other in their demands upon it, and how they contribute to the maintenance of their chosen habitat. . .(but). . .It is altogether harder to find out how the insect fauna of any habitat is doing the same thing, how it is contributing to the efficiency of the turnover of matter and energy.

"I can think of no book on Africa which brings to owen's notice this complexity and interwoven quality so effective as Archie Carr's present volume," Darling writes. "Many of us who have worked in Africa have been interested primarily in the larger animals or the birds, or in forestry or botany. . . Carr is a zoologist with a wide knowledge of the tropics, so when he got into Africa he saw the natural scene of rain forest, mountain, plain and marsh in a more all-around way, and from this we now benefit in this delightful book."

The author, Dr. Archie Carr first visited Africa in 1952 as a member of a team studying malaria, bilharziasis and filiariasis in Nyasaland. Being a biologist whose sense of curiosity is so highly developed as to be almost wayward, he began soaking up information about pythons, fly spouts, lions and fishes as fast as he did about mosquitoes.

He went back to Africa in 1955, 1956, and 1963 to study turtle migrations, doubling on the last as a delegate to the meetings of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature, held in Nairobi. From these visits, from the catholicity of his interests and from the extensive studies that they have stimulated, Dr. Carr has become widely informed about African ecology and is understandably concerned about it.

Carr's text for The Land and Wildlife of Africa is supplemented by Lifestyle illustrated essays designed to interpret pictorially the theme of each chapter. These themes cover "The Dark Continent," "Life in Lakes and Rivers," "Grasslands and Great Game, "The Carnivores," "The Tropical Rain Forest," "Islands in the Clouds," "The Naturalist's Promised Land" and "Wilderness for the Future." The appendix includes a display of African stamps in color, a reference map of place names and a bibliography.

SOUTH AFRICA — By Tom Hopkinson — Time Inc. This is another volume in the Life World Library series. It comes at a time when South Africa is one of the enigmas of international and domestic politics.

"Everybody wants to know about South Africa," says the Rt. Rev. Joost de Blank, Canon of Westminer and former Archbishop of Cape Town. "It is always in the headlines. It is a country ruled by an oligarchy whose forefathers came from Europe. It is the only nation in the world where there is a sizable minority of white people in a country predominantly black, and the whites in fact constitute almost one fifth of the total population of 17 people."

The volume is lavishly illustrated by color photographs, and deals with every aspect of South African life.

When the rest of the world complains of South Africa's 'reactionary" solution of strict racial segregation, South Africa claims that the United States avoided its original racial problem by exterminating the indigenous people of America (the Indians; or exterminating them to a certain degree, at any rate); and that in any event, America's present racial problems have little in common with those of South Africa. The Negores are a minority group in the U.S.A.; but it is the whites who form the minority group in South Africa and still hold the upper hand.

Canon Blank observes that "South Africa is a land of perplexing contrasts. . .haunted by a fear of absorption (by the native population). . .Yet, at the same time its economy is booming. It has never been more prosperous. Its gold and diamond mining production is immense. Foreign financiers fall over one another to invest in South African enterprises; and foreign industries, producing everything from automobiles to textiles, set up factory after factory on South African soil."

To this, Canon Blank says: "Anyone who wishes to be at all intelligently informed about South Africa must know something about its geography, its history, its development, its hopes and its fears." And, this is what Hopkinson, the author of the book's text provides, accompanied by a wealth of pictures.

The book shows that South Africa can be an attractive As Hopkinson explains: "It is difficult to imagine anywhere else in the world a country more blessed by nature than South Africa. . .amazing variety of natural beauties and attractions. Moreover, they are still largely unspoiled. The country was spared the worst rages suffered by more advanced nations in the early Industrial Revolution. Learning from the mistakes of others, the South Africans have not destroyed their landscape but instead have provided — through roads, railroads and airports — the means to travel easily about it and enjoy it. . .Among South Africa's natural wonders are tremendous mountains; glorious beaches, upland plains still roamed by wild animals in herds and droves; and deserts which, when the spring rain falls, unfold overnight into flower gardens. South Africa is a land ideally suited for sport, sailing, swimming, surfing, skin diving, biggame fishing, mountaineering, horseback riding, hunting and every other kind of recreation."

And the summing up is contained in the words: "South Africa makes an overwhelming impression on most casual visitors. . .with its outward covering of public order, its wide range of sports and amusements, its luxurious homes and holiday resorts, and with the ease of life where attentive service can be cheaply bought.

Hobby Kits Are Growing In Popularity

The popularity of hobby kits is reaching an all-time high and attracting adults in ever-greater numbers, according to a study.

The choice of hobby kits is broadening and now includes everything from monsters to model cars and airplanes with gasoline engines, according to F. W. Woolworth Co. which sells kits in nearly all of its 2,117 stores from coast to coast.

Hobbyists are giving prime attention to customized car kits that come in styles including dragster sports cars heavy with chrome, replicas of all the new and old-time cars, and racing cars named after famous drivers and cartoon TV characters. The models are in a variety of scales ranging up to 1/24, and run up to 30 inches in length.

Also, the hobbyists are getting more selective. When new model cars come out, hobbyists immediately want models to build. They are also becoming more choosey and demanding as the prices of hobby kits rise.

For the first time in recent years, model airplane kits are on the upsurge. Gasoline - engine - powered models are very popular. Improved ready-to-fly plastic models and a renewed interest in balsa kits have helped to keep this trend strong.

Woolworth reports a strong awareness of military activities is evident in the hobby lines, with numerous battle front construction kits and various types of weapons still popular but the demand is not as great as early 1964 and late 1963.

The surprise to Woolworth was the popularity of a complete line of horror kits, which included plastic models of Frankenstein's monster, Dracula and the Wolfman.

Space models, considered a strong contender for leadership among hobby kits, have yet to get off the ground in the popularity contest.

This much is certain, by year end the number of model kits will have again broken all records.

Fledging Photog Learns The Picture Is the Thing

By SUSAN DESFOR
Daughter of Irving Desfor
AP Newsfeatures

My family has always been photography minded so I took to a camera early. As counselor - photographer at children's camps for four years, I learned to shoot natural light candid actions and was fortunate in having a page of camp pictures published.

But when I was invited to join more than 200 reporters, photographers and broadcasters to meet stars like Jimmy Stewart, Carroll Baker, Karl Mauldin and Ricardo Montalban, I was so excited I didn't think I could hold a camera steady! For a week before take-off time, I practiced shooting with my father's Rolleflex. I also took a second 2 ¼ x 2 ¼ camera, a Zeiss Super Ikonta B, which I've handled for many years. I decided to concentrate on large negative, black-and-white pictures. It simplified film problems to use only one size and one type of film: fast 120 Tri-X. Having two cameras prevents a single camera breakdown emergency and gives more pictures to shoot before reloading.

The occasion was a press premiere of "Cheyenne Autumn" in its Wyoming locale. Besides the stars of the film, the governor of the state and the city's mayor were to review a Western parade in front of the Capitol. There was to be a Cheyenne Indian trail dedication, a buffalo barbecue and other events to be photographed.

Flight time finally came! At the start I was scared and too embarrassed to shoot pictures. I feared I was going to fluff my chance as a photographer. But after meeting some of the press group and finding they were just friendly human beings, my confidence was restored.

On arrival in Cheyenne, the hectic schedule arranged by Warner Brothers began. I soon found that press photographers concentrate only on getting their pictures and don't hear a young girl's timid "Excuse me, please!" just behind them. As a result, at times I was shooting the stars framed by shoulders and backs of heads.

Press photographers, I thought, are inconsiderate of those behind them. But my father has since explained to me that a press photographer on assignment has to come back with a picture — not with an excuse that he was blocking the view of someone behind him. He said it was up to me to get up in front also, stand on a chair or find some other vantage point from which to shoot.

At the formal press conference, Jimmy Stewart made a unique entrance. Facing the press group, he suddenly removed a small camera from his pocket, put it to his eye and started to shoot. "There!" he exclaimed, "I think I got all of you. Now you can relax." It got the meeting off to a good-natured start.

Later, talking to Mr. tSewart, I found he had a half-frame camera which uses 35mm film but produces twice as many pictures per roll since each frame is half the regular size. Next day from his seat on the parade platform, Jimmy Stewart used the camera again on the crowd and on the officials. Meanwhlie I took pictures of him taking pictures.

The schedule for the day will include sessions from 9:30-11:30 a.m. and 1-3 p.m. in the University Student Union Pioneer Room, 2050 E. Evans Ave.

Miss Clark, director of the New School for Music Study, is an eminent authority on music education and piano teaching. She is well-known to piano teachers across the country for her nationwide program of workshops and summer study courses and for her series of educational piano materials, "The Frances Clark Library for Paino Students."

Hootenanny To Appear In Pueblo

PUEBLO — Stars of the Jack Linkletter "Hootenanny Show" will present a special concert in Pueblo's Memorial Hall on Friday, Nov. 13. Curtain time is 8 p.m.

Miss Frieda Bell Altman, sponsor, said the famed television folk music performers will include The Wayfarers, Stan Wilson, and Richard and Jim, a Bluegrass comedy team. They are part of the group on a national collegiate tour.

"I have selected these artists because of their true presentation of folk music, the expression of the times preserved in music," Miss Altman says. "This music draws the old as well as the young because a folk song is characterized by an earthiness in the lyrics."

Folk music is one of the oldest of the popular performing arts. The songs are simple words of protest and humble experience, the campfire and work songs.

Miss Altman scheduled the Pueblo appearance of the Linkletter "Hootenanny" stars because an audience gets more out of a live performance than a recording. The audience has the opportunity to participate in the rhythmic clapping and group singing.

Tickets for the single performance are available from Miss Altman's city auditorium office Monday through Friday. Mail orders are handled promptly.

All seats are reserved. Prices are $2, $1 and 50 cents.

Festival Has Top Season

STRATFORD, Ont. (AP) — The Stratford Festival attracted 324,200 spectators during its 12th season last summer.

The box office gross for the 16 - week display of drama and music was $1,170,000. Of four plays included in the repertory, "King Lear" proved the biggest draw, playing to 97 per cent capacity. "Richard II" foloed at 86 per cent; "The Country Wife," 80 per cent, and "The Bourgeois Gentleman," 75.

Colorado Quarterly Has Wide Range of Articles

A defense of the method of rewarding professors on the basis of the amount of their research and publishing is contained in the autumn issue of the Colorado Quarterly, a University of Colorado publication issued today.

The article, "Publish or Perish," is by Asst. Prof. John V. Price of the University of California, Riverside. It is one of 4 articles and 15 poems by 13 authors in the issue, which is on sale for 75 cents a copy at Colorado book stores.

Price attacks as uninformed and ill - defined popular notions that "inspirational teachers" often take a back seat to their researching and publishing colleagues.

"I should like to suggest," Price writes, "that the criterion of 'inspirational teaching' has become a mildewed cliche, like popular concepts of Mother, Home, Country, and God, and that it has also become an excuse for not discovering what the real faults in teaching are."

Price charges that most non-academic critics of education confuse inspiration with sentimentality, that students really regard as "inspiring" a teacher they happen to like because the teacher gives high grades or caters to their own prejudices.

He says a university "must initially and continually be an institution devoted to the expansion and dissemination of knowledge," that it is not "a sophisticated continuation of high school" and students really are not in a position to judge the quality of a professor's teaching until they have been out of school 10 or 20 years.

"The so - called 'publish or perish' policy (for rewarding and promoting faculty members) assumes that the more a man knows, the more he will have to impart to his students," Price says.

He concludes that there are likely to be errors in judging a teacher's worth by the policy. However, the system is far superior to any methods of judging a teacher "on the flimsy evidence of student demonstrations, opinions born of ignorance, or on the undefined, amorphous quality of "inspiretional teaching'."

In other articles, Assoc Prof. William Clendenin of the CU College of Music writes about the prospects of financial assistance to culture in "Government Aid for the Arts," Prof. Margaret Robb of the CU Speech and Drama Department discusses the work of Dame Edith Sitwell in "The Growth of a Poet," and Albert Fowler, a managing editor of Approach magazine, describes the preoccupation of authors over the years with death bombs and world destruction.

Other selections in the issue include two lectures delivered last spring on the campus: Joseph D. Lohman's "Changing Patterns of Crime," delivered by the dean of the University of California School of Criminology at the Colorado Newspaper Conference; and "Toward a Recovery of Rational Man," the 29th annual Lecture on Research and Creative Work, presented by Prof. Kenneth R. Hammond, director of the CU Behavior Research Laboratory.

Robert Morse Says Actors Are Much Too Comfortable

By DICK KLEINER

HOLLYWOOD (NEA) — What we need is a bunch of uncomfortable actors. The ones we have are entirely too soft, artistically speaking.

"Most Hollywood movie producers and directors," says Robert Morse, "put too much stress on comfort. Is the actor comfortable in his role? Does he have a comfortable dressing room?

"Everybody has to be happy — and not more than 100 yards from the commissary. This is a mistake. This isn't art. Art must be a bit daring, a bit uncomfortable.

"There are very few Hollywood producers who would have given me that part in 'The Loved One.' But Tony Richardson did. Maybe that's why he's so great — he has the imagination to see beyond the usual thing of comfort."

Morse thinks his role in "The Loved One," a satire on the big burial business in Los Angeles, is far and away his best on film.

He made a few movies about eight years ago, then the fairly recent "Honeymoon Hotel" ("It opened and closed and now you can buy a print for $13") and the unreleased "Quick Before It Melts" ("It will open in February and it's not a bad movie.")

Since he's been in Hollywood, the former Broadway star has been swamped by television offers.

"The Danny Kaye people keep calling me," he says. "But I just don't feel like doing it. After we finish 'The Loved One,' I want to go back home to Park Ridge, N.J., and watch the crocuses bloom and finish my basement play room.

"Put it this way — I'll do television when it's my own show."

Quite possible.

She's an elegant, Park Avenue sort of woman, and it is hard to picture her anywhere but New York. Maybe that's why she was cast as one of the castaways on CBS' Gilligan's Island.

"This woman," Miss Schafer says, "told me I should gamble more. That day someone suggested I buy a certain stock, which way then at 9. I remembered the fortune teller's advice, and I bought some. A week later it was 14.

"A few days later, a friend from England called me and said she had a little dog and would I like it. Imagine, accepting a dog you've never seen. Well, I gambled and the dog arrived — that was Queenie there — and she's given me more pleasure than any human being ever did.

"Those first gambles turned out so well, I decided to gamble on Gilligan's Island, too."

This is not her first fling here. She was in many movies some years ago, generally playing the rich friend of the rich star, stars like Lana Turner and Hedy Lamarr and that crowd.

"I quit Hollywood," she says, "when rich people went out and beatniks came in. But now it looks as though the rich are making a comeback. I do hope so."

Election Costs Networks More Than $25 Million

Is the sound of the election still ringing in your ears? Theres good reason if you were near a radio or TV set recently.

Networks both radio and television put over $25,000,000 into 1964 political coverage and one sank $1.8 million into one night alone. . .election eve.

At the El Paso County level KRDO, KVOR, and KSSS, to name a few, gave not only extensive coverage to the issues and candidates, but allowed a fair amount of the voter's views to be aired also.

Campaign Radio and TV advertising expenditures were divided about evenly, according to Broadcasting Magazine, between national on the one hand, and state, and local slates on the other, for an all - time high of $40,000,000. This is almost three times the record expenditures set in 1960. . .$14,200,000.

One reason given for this soaring campaign cost according to experts, is an item that we've mentioned before. . .Section 315 of the Federal Communications Act or the equal time section. Many broadcasters have failed to present controversial issues on the air for ear thattheymaybef orcdvbgkqjv fear that they may be forced to give time to many minor parties in the country.

Free time for both President Johnson and candidate Goldwater were turned down because of section 315. A special appeal in behalf of the United Fund and the Community Chest campaigns by President Johnson was not aired because of the possibility of demands for equal time by not only the Republican Party, but also a number of other "legally qualified" parties that comprise less than a few per cent of the audience. Senator Goldwater was also not allowed to answer President Johnson's address on foreign affairs partially because of the fear by networks and stations of being forced to grant equal time.

Section 315 not only makes it more necessary for a candidate to buy time to tell the public his side of the story making politics more and more a rich man's game according to some critics, but also is a stumbling block to more professional and creative journalism on radio and TV.

Paul Picerni Has Loads of Experience

Paul Picerni, seen as Dr. Dan Garrett in ABC-TV's new daytime serial, "The Young Marrieds," has played featured roles in well over 150 television shows. One of his most famous roles was that of Lee Hobson, chief aide to Robert Stack in ABC-TV's "The Untouchables."

Paul was born in New York City, and received his education there. He attended Newtown High in Elmhurst, New York City, and after graduating enlisted in the Air Force, serving as first lieutenant. He flew 25 missions in the China-Burma - India Theater and was awarded both the Air Force Medal and the Distinguished Flying Cross.

After separation from the service, Picerni enrolled at Loyola University at Los Angeles as a drama major. Upon graduation he became head of the drama department at Mount St. Mary's, a girls' school in Westwood.

In 1950, Paul was placed under contract to Warner Brothers, and among his first assignments was a role in "House of Wax," the first picture made in 3D.

Later, Picerni worked in some 60 motion picture, including such hits as "The Young Philadelphians," "Marjorie Morningstar," "Operation Pacific," "Breakthrough," and "Desert Song."

In 1953, Paul left Warners to freelance, appearing in some 150 television shows prior to signing to portray Lee Hobson in "The Untouchables." His most recent television roles have been in "The Greatest Show on Earth," "Great Adventure," "My Three Sons," and the "Tonight Show."

Picerni is married to the former Marie Mason, who was a ballet dancer when they met. They live in Tarzana with their eight children, four boys and four girls who range from 7 to 15 years.

Co-Authors Will Address Radio Group

Inez Hunt and Wanetta Draper, co - authors of the forthcoming book, "Lightning in His Hand" will speak to the Pikes Peak Amateur Radio Association at 8 p.m. Nov. 11 at the VFW club hall.

"Lightning In His Hand" is the story of Nikola Tesla, an eccentric scientist, who carried out what he felt were his most important experiments during a nine month period when he resided in Colorado Springs. It was during this period that Tesla knocked out all the power lines in the entire city during an experimental synthetic electrical storm.

Tesla, called the "father of alternating current" invented the Tesla coil, a device which is an integral part of every radio and television set.

Inez Hunt and Wanetta Draper have collaborated on many books on Colorado, including "Colorado's Restless Ghosts." Mrs. Hunt teaches a communications course at Colorado College.

Newly elected president Phil Kraushaar urges all those interested in amateur radio operation to attend this program. Refreshments will be served.

Mark Azzolina to Conduct NORAD Band for Last Time

Lt. Colonel Mark Azzolina, founder and leader of the famed NORAD Command Band, will retire from the United States Air Force on November 30.

The popular music man leaves the service after completing more than 22 years of active duty as a military musician and information officer.

Colonel Azzolina literally grew up in the military music field, being the son of Chief Warrrant Officer Philip J. Azzolina who retired in May of 1951 after 37 years as an Army and Air Force bandleader.

The elder Azzolina's son, Chief Warrant Officer Nicholas J. Azzolina, is also a retired Air Force bandleader. These dedicated father and sons have spent a combined total of 73 years as United States military musicians, composers and leaders.

NORAD's Azzolina came to Colorado Springs in January of 1955 as CONAD-ADC assistant information officer. In April of 1959 he was selected by NORAD's first Commander in Chief, General Earle E. Partridge, to organize, train and lead the NORAD Command Band. This was to be the first multi-service, international musical organization ever assembled as a permanent unit.

The band was started with a nucleus of 42 USAF bandsmen and later augmented with carefully selected musicians of the RCAF, the U.S. Army and the U.S. Navy. The band and its many subordinate units is now composed of 95 officers and men. Under Azzolina's command and leadership, the NORAD "Commanders" orchestra has risen to a musical pinnacle recognized throughout the world.

Many honors have been accorded the NORAD musical crew. Some of the better known are: a citation as the honorary best dance band by the American Federation of Musicians; invitations to perform annually at New York's Carnegie Hall; opening of the 1964 Hollywood Bowl concert season; and numerous invitations to perform on national television programs, World's Fairs and international expositions.

Maestro Azzolina, who in civilian music circles was "downbeat" poll - winning vocalist - orchestra leader Mark Carter, has also received many awards, honors and citations. Some of these are: honorary life member of the American Federation of Musicians, honorary member of the Canadian Bandmasters Association, honorary member of the Texas Bandmasters Association.

He is a charter member of the National Band Association, a member of Duquesne University's honorary music fraternity, "Loyal Knights of Duquesne," and a full member of ASCAP (The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers). He is also an honorary citizen of the state of Texas and of the cities of Canon City, Colo., Hollywood, Florida; and El Paso, Texas.

Among his numerous published compositions are the official song of NORAD, "Partners in Defense;" "The Shield of Freedom," written for the U.S. Air Defense Command; "The Air Force Association March;" and "New York Suite," written in honor of the band's first concert in Carnegie Hall. Recently the White House requested copies of the NORAD Band's unique renditions of the "Star Spangled Banner" and "O, Canada."

Upon his retirement from the Air Force, Colonel Azzolina succeeds the eminent composer - conductor, Dr. Lucien Cailliet, as director of LeBlanc Music Publications, Inc. (LPI), with offices in Kenosha, Wis. He will also be engaged as a conductor and stage - band musician throughout the United States and Canada.

Colonel Azzolina's final concert in Colorado Springs as conductor of the NORAD "Cavalcade of Music" will take place Friday, Nov. 20, at 8:15 p.m. at the Civic Auditorium.

The fabled unicorn was said to have the head and body of a horse, the hind legs of an antelope, the tail of a lion, sometimes the beard of a goat, and its chief feature a long sharp, twisted horn, similar to the narwhal's tusk, set in the middle of its forehead. A passage in the Old Testament tells how the unicorn defeated an elephant in combat.

Estes Park Sets Season's First Play

"I Like it Here," a comedy in three acts, by A. B. Shiffrin, produced with permission of Samuel French, will be the first production of the year by the Fine Arts Guild of the Rockies, according to David McNeil, President, in the Top-of-the-Center Theatre in Estes Park.

By action of the Board of Directors of the Guild, the organization has a new "home," in the Estates Park Center for Research and Education, next to Bond Park, in the center of the community of Estes Park. Dates of the play are Nov. 13 and 14.

"I Like it Here," presented in the Golden Theatre in New York, in 1946, features the antics of Mr. Fixit, Willie W. Kringle, played by Paul Moyer, who arranges life satisfactorily for the rest of the cast of characters. Willie is an earnest, engaging, and infinitely skillful man-servant who has been newly hired in the home of a professor in a New England town. Sebastian Merriweather, the professor, is played by David McNeil.

Willie is a refuge from middle Europe who has just become an American citizen. As such he is more American than most Americans and he likes it here well enough to set busily and confidently about making the ideals of a democracy work. Besides all this Willie can cook and repair things.

He immediately sets out to protect the hen-pecked professor from his determined wife, played by Mrs. Leo (B. J.) Martin. He urges a young ex-soldier, Brad Monroe, played by Robert Minser, of whom the daughter, Laura, played by Martha Ball, is quite fond, to run for office against a rich lawyer, David Bellow, played by George Cowles, to whom the daughter is engaged.

Others in the cast are Smedley, Captain Leroux, and the sculptress, Saphronia Lawrence. Betty June Whiteside is the Assistant Director, with D. Ned Linegar directing.

Sweetest Smell Around Is That of Home-Baked Bread

The other Saturday my husband and I entertained two couples and the mother of one of the men who was visiting from Michigan.

My husband had recently given me the two-volume edition of the new American Heritage cookbook, and I say this without any qualification, this book is a collectors' item.

It is a treasure trove of Americana, handsomely illustrated, chockful of interesting (and little known) stories devoted to the history of food in this country, and recipes that defend our position that we too know something about the culinary arts of the world.

Of noteworthy mention here too, the book includes an article by Lucius Beebe who lauds the Antlers Hotel in its heyday when it was considered one of the best eating places in the young West.

Back to Saturday, however: one of the women showed the book to the visiting mother, and when they reached the section on American breads, the younger woman confessed she had never baked a loaf of bread.

The older woman, showing her surprise, commented that she still baked several loaves a week, and said she thought it was one of the most satifying things a woman could do.

Just the idea of baking bread is a formidable thing to many women living in this age of quick mixes and packaged goods.

Baking bread inspires awe and wonder in many women who are discouraged in the first instance because they think it takes hours to turn out a finished loaf. It does take time, but when you open the oven door and get a whiff of the delicious aroma of the beautifully puffed, lightly browned loaf, it's all worth it.

Plan a free afternoon soon and see.

WHITE BREAD

1 cup milk
1½ tablespoons sugar
2 teaspoons salt
2 tablespoons butter
1 cup warm water
2 cakes fresh yeast
5 and ¾ cups white flour

Scald milk and add sugar, salt, shortening, and warm water. Stir until shortening is melted. Cool to lukewarm. Dissolve yeast in one-half cup of the liquid; return to remaining liquid, and add half the flour and beat smooth with a spoon. Add remaining flour and turn out onto a floured board. Knead about five minutes until smooth and satiny. Shape into a smooth ball and place in a greased bowl. Brush the top lightly with melted butter and cover with a towel and allow to rise in a warm place (80 to 85 degrees) for an hour and a half, or until double in bulk. Knead the dough down.

Again turn out onto a floured board and shape into two loaves. Place in greased pans (9x5x3), cover with a towel, and let rise one hour in a warm place until doubled in bulk.

Bake in a 400 degree oven for 45 minutes. This amount makes two one-pound loaves.

Kookie Learns Acting With Pros Ain't Easy

By DICK KLEINER
Hollywood Correspondent
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

HOLLYWOOD (NEA) — The scars have healed now, but the struggle has left Edd Byrnes permanently changed on the inside. He's become mature, no longer the innocent young dreamer with stars in his eyes and a comb in his pocket. He's faced the world.

This transformation happened in Yugoslavia, where Edd played a part in a newly released movie called "The Secret Invasion." Stewart Granger, Raf Vallone and Mickey Rooney were others involved.

"With those guys in a scene with you," Edd says, trembling a bit at the memory, "you had to fight for your life. Rooney was always ad libbing — the funniest lines in the picture are Mickey's ad libs. And Granger kept wanting to change the script, to add scenes where he'd punch me.

"It was the first time I'd been up against anyting like that. On 77 Sunset Strip, nobody cared about who had what scene or what line of dialogue. If somebody wanted a close-up, Efrem Zimbalist couldn't care less. If somebody wanted to say a particular line, good luck to them.

"But, man, this was so different. I learned plenty."

Otherwise, Edd found the experience pleasant. He fell in love with the scenic beauty in and around Dubrovnik, a picture-post card Yugoslavian seaport where the film was shot. The only thing the place lacks, he thinks is the luxury touches of a good American hotel.

"The food is poor," he says, "and so are the plumbing and electricity. The power is sort of glow. You can't read in your room at night."

Fortunately for Byrnes' stomach, Granger had rented a villa nearby and had somehow arranged for daily shipments of fresh lobster. So, virtually every night, the cast repaired to Granger's place for cocktails and a lobster dinner.

It was a very shellfish thing to do, but people have to look out for themselves.

Edd hopes the picture will advance his career. There have been too many encounters with producers who couldn't see him in their productions, because they felt he was too closely identified with his Kookie role on 77 Sunset Strip.

"I'm looking," he says, "for small but good parts in first-class productions. I'd have loved to have played the part of the interpreter for the president in 'Fail Safe,' for example. I'd much rather have a little part in a class film than a lead in a B-picture. But they're hard to come by."

Meanwhile, he's mulling over a series at NBC, which sounds as bad (and as potentially successful) as its title, Country Cousins. Edd would play an Army lieutenant who is assigned to visit his backwoods family and purchase five acres for a missile base site. Arthur O'Connell is supposed to play the chief country cousin.

"It's kind of like a cross between No Time for Sergeants and The Beverly Hillbillies," Edd says.
